ART AND HARD TIMES

Hard times or no, the cause of art seems to be a flourishing one. The American Art Dealers association recently came to bat with the estimate that during the past year gifts of paintings, sculpture and facilities for art appreciation and education worth more than $136,000,000 were made to the American public.

Most of this is made up of the opening of new museums and of private collections turned over to the public. Chief among the latter is the $50,000,000 collection of the late Henry Clay Frick, which became public property last fall on the death of his widow.

A year of depression may not seem a good year for such munificence. The charitable organizations could have used that $136,000,000 very nicely. Yet to criticize would be to take a very narrow view. Those art gifts will be valuable to the nation for many years to come. Regardless of hard times, the money was well spent.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Department of Commerce has announced that the United States is producing more than 275,000 short tons of macaroni, spaghetti, vermicelli, noodles and other foods of this family a year. To many, however, it may seem strange that these are not measured in long tons.

The Town Quack

Recently, at a town down east of here, and he was in an all night cafe right after a dance broke up. He said he would have paid money for such entertainment between trains, and that the people who thought Howard Hodge's picture, "Are These Our Children," was bold, ain't seen nothing yet. I guess the young folks do have some pretty ribald times, now and then, but I'm not much for condemning them. We've just got to straighten up the homes some way. I think that is the popular solution, although you do find people who lay all of our ills to the 18th and 19th amendments. However, I won't quote anybody as being against those amendments again, because I almost got a prominent man worked over with a rolling pin by quoting him a while back. Miss Kathryn Hawkins of Lamasa spent the week end in Midland. J. W. B. Hogan of Sierra Blanca spent the week end in Midland on business. Barney G. Grafa is confined to his home several days because of an attack of influenza. Mr. and Mrs. Roy Parks will leave this evening for El Paso to attend the cattlemen's convention. W. F. Scarborough is in El Paso this week to attend the cattlemen's convention. A Midland man, who doesn't get out much after dark, spent about three hours waiting for a train in the dead of the early morning re-

Advertisement for Chesterfield cigarettes featuring several small photos of men and the text: 'There's only one thing that will chase a morning groch quicker than a warm shower. And that's a cold one. With a Chesterfield to follow. And even if you're rushed... there's time to appreciate Chesterfield's better taste. One man likes his coffee weak. Another likes it strong. But it's dollars to doughnuts both want mild cigarettes. And that means Chesterfields. They get you started on the right foot. They're good anywhere. Anytime. And later... in the office when the phones begin to buzz and the big boss begins to shout... put Chesterfield on the job. It starts out cool... stays cool... and keeps you cool in a hot spot till the final whistle blows. It's going to be a big evening. So change your clothes and step out. And don't forget your Chesterfields. You'll need them. And if it's mixed company you'll want to take an extra pack. Their purity is their password... wherever people are particular. Chesterfield has never failed to make its contract. It bids a grand slam for mildness and better taste... and comes through with all the honors every time... Because every shred of Chesterfield leaf is carefully selected... and by men who "know." One more Chesterfield and you can call it a day. And notice... the last one tastes just as good as the first. That's no accident. That's the sum and substance of Chesterfield's popularity... told in two words... "They Satisfy."

THEY'RE Milder •• THEY'RE PURE •• THEY TASTE BETTER •• They Satisfy

Rangers Consider Use of Radio Sets

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UP).—Texas Rangers in pursuit of thieving bands and rum brigades along the Rio Grande may soon be armed with a radio set in addition to "six-shooters" and rifles.

San Antonio's police transmitter, broadcasting tips on crime and vice, may be increased from 100 watt power to 400 watts. Police Commissioner Phil Wright has invited federal, state and county officers in South Texas to install receiving sets which will pick up alarms broadcast here.

The Federal Radio Commission has announced a favorable attitude.

A German photographer has invented film rolls for a camera from which a single negative can be removed for developing without exposing the other sections of the film.

Separate chapters are devoted to George Graham Rice, now in Atlanta prison, but who in his heyday had thousands waiting for words from him on their favorite stock; of the Rev. Fenwick Holmes, who preached and had great followings which others of his clique sold stock issues to; of W. W. Eastday, of Harold Russell Ryder, the Broadway playboy who lived at a $500,000 a year pace and who is now in Sing Sing because of illegalities; of Arthur Montgomery and his palatial suite of offices and his bucket shops; of Charles V. Bob, who rained nationwide publicity through donations and spending to meet the right people; and of Dr. Nicholas Artos, the immigrant whose word became financial law to Hungarians and Italians.

In the final chapters they discuss proper investments, the workings of the New York Stock exchange and the practices the stock exchange attempts to halt; deplore the attempts to discontinue short trading and finally warn that in event one is uncertain of his ability to understand sound investments, he had better continue his plunging to sound government bonds.

Plea Gets Freedom For Scotch Poet

LEEDS, Eng. (UP).—Hugh McDowall, 24-year-old Scottish poet, may never be another Bobby Burns, but he is likely to go far.

Leaving his native health with 150 poems and no money, McDowall started for London. He got as far as Leeds, without paying his fare, and when he had before the magistrate produced the following:

"I left my house in Scotland, to me for London far. And did not have a penny to pay for a ride in a car. Once I really lucky was, as from Moffat to Carlisle. I journeyed cycle-pillion for high on forty mile. At the railway platform stopped a train for London bound. And after it was started they searched and I was found."

The magistrate said he would give McDowall another chance. As McDowall smiled and moved away a stranger stopped him and handed him something.

Five minutes later he was on the way to London again, his 150 poems tucked safely under his arm and money jingling in his pockets.

Book Exposes Stock Rackets

NEW YORK, (UP).—The ancient trick of exacting wealth through the medium of prettily embossed stocks continues to exist, Watson Washburn, former assistant attorney general of New York state, and Edmund S. DeLong reveal in their book, "High and Low Financiers" (Hobbs-Merrill).

As a result of the investigations and actions of the Bureau of Securities of the attorney general's department, they have compiled a series of stories of actual frauds which read more like fiction than cold fact.

Separate chapters are devoted to George Graham Rice, now in Atlanta prison, but who in his heyday had thousands waiting for words from him on their favorite stock; of the Rev. Fenwick Holmes, who preached and had great followings which others of his clique sold stock issues to; of W. W. girl

BY JOAN CLAYTON

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Beautiful Ellen Rossiter, 20-year-old, falls in love with Larry Harrowgate, young artist, whom she met at Dreamland where she works as a dance hall hostess. Larry is engaged to Elizabeth Bowes, a debutante, but shows attentions to Ellen until his fiancée returns from Europe.

From a sense of gratitude Ellen agrees to marry Steven Barclay, a kind and wealthy man of 57, who has paid hospital expenses for her brother, Mike, injured in a street accident. He also finds a job for Bert Armstead, engaged to Ellen's sister, Myra.

Barclay has been married and divorced. Scandal accompanied his divorce from Leda Grayson, a dancer, and, fearing this talk may be repeated, he and Ellen agree to keep their marriage secret until after they sail for Europe.

Barclay wishes to settle a fortune on Ellen. They go to the offices of Symes & Prendergast, Barclay's attorneys, but the papers are not ready and Ellen refuses to wait, saying they can be signed after the ceremony.

On the wedding morning Ellen feels she cannot go through with the ceremony. Myra persuades her that she must. The two couples drive to a small Connecticut town where the marriage is to take place. Barclay is aware of Ellen's fears, asks her if she wishes to postpone the marriage. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXXV

Ellen was overwhelmed with relief. Steven's question struck the chains from her very spirit. To postpone this marriage, she asks her if Steven's return from London—that would give her blessed weeks in the world.

Ellen, still in a world of unreality, was resolving to be the best wife in the world to Steven. She accepted the arm he offered, clung to it and looked up confidently at her husband, her eyes luminous and solemn as a child's eyes. Together they walked out into the sunshine.

There was rice after all—a small bag of it flung by Mrs. Southey from the steps of the church. The spell of solemnity disappeared in a burst of hysterical laughter.

Refreshments had been prepared in the parsonage, a tiny white house in the shadow of the church, but the wedding party was too hurried to stop much to Mrs. Southey's disappointment. She stood on the sidewalk, shaded by a great oak tree, and waved until the big car was out of sight.

Ellen felt small and insignificant, not married at all, as the car turned through the high iron gates, cracked up a smooth highway that was like a long, white ribbon, and at last hesitated beneath the porte cochere of a great stone house. Lights burned from all the windows on the lower floor.

They had scarcely been gone a quarter of an hour before Louis Symes, Barclay's lawyer, leaped from the roadster that had come roaring down the highway, frantically rang the parsonage doorbell and demanded to see Steven at once. Mrs. Southey, in a fervor of interest and excitement, told him the marriage had already taken place. No, she did not know where the bride and bridegroom were bound. She thought perhaps—

"Let me see your husband," Symes cut her short.

Almost before she had pointed out her husband's study, Symes was striding across the room, knocked on the door and was inside. Within five minutes the study door burst open again. The lawyer raced from the house and down to shady sidewalk to his car. The Rev. Mr. Southey came from his study and paced the floor, a sign that he was deeply agitated. He did not respond to Mrs. Southey's anxious questions. He only told her that they both must hope Mr. Symes could locate his client.

A few hours later, while Symes was scouring New York for them, Ellen and Steven made a visit to Mike at the hospital. The boy was excited and nervous because of the crowd in his room. He did not know whether to laugh, cry or be cross. When Ellen attempted to take him in her arms, Mike wriggled free to demand if she would bring him something from London.

Ellen assured him she would. But she felt the familiar pang the child had been so adept at causing lately. Just then he did something with the peculiar graciousness which made her forget. Mike stretched out one brown little paw and grabbed Steven's cuff.

"I'm awfully glad Ellen married you," he announced frankly. "I like you."

They all laughed. Myra demanded to know if he were not glad she had married Bert. In a fit of shyness Mike refused to answer. Ellen had been made proud and happy and despite Mike's protests she gathered his head into her arms and gave him one of their old bear hugs. She did not know just why she should feel so grateful to him.

There were tearful goodbyes on the hospital steps and one horrible moment when Ellen felt she could not leave Myra and Molly and almost said so. Then the next minute she and Steven were in the car. There was no chauffeur now.

"I wanted to be alone with you," Steven said as they whirled away.

They were driving to his country home—now her home, too, a great house on Long Island that had been put in order and opened just for that night. It was not so many miles from Manhattan, just a pleasant drive through the still, breathless evening. When they were clear of traffic and on the long, silver road, Steven pulled her close to him. She dropped her head on his shoulder.

Strange that she had never before thought of Steven driving a car. She felt safe and secure as she watched his hands, steady at the wheel. Would life with him always be safe. Suddenly she knew that she was hungry.

"We're almost there now," Barclay told her, almost as if he read her thoughts. "The place isn't staffed—just the butler. But he'll have food for us. I don't believe you have eaten today?"

"I haven't," she admitted. "I'm awfully hungry."

"We'd have eaten in town if I had only thought! But I was so anxious for you to see the place that is to be our home, Ellen."

They drove on through the September night.

Ellen felt small and insignificant, not married at all, as the car turned through the high iron gates, cracked up a smooth highway that was like a long, white ribbon, and at last hesitated beneath the porte cochere of a great stone house. Lights burned from all the windows on the lower floor.

"We'll have that food," he said quietly. "The bells aren't connected and I'll have to find Ferguson."

With that he was gone. Ellen trembled as she saw that he had left the room. How good he was! She waited five minutes, 10 minutes, and with each passing moment she felt her courage revive. She began to wish that he would return.

Lying on the coffee table were the morning newspapers, still primly jacked and uncreased. Still glanced casually at the headlines, then began to turn the pages in search of a favorite columnist. As the society page flipped by, she paused.

There was a brief announcement that the engagement between Lawrence Harrowgate and Elizabeth Bowes had been broken.

Sweet Are the Uses of Adversity, Says Writer, Who Sees Passing of Twin Beds And Indigestion and a New Life Coming

The author of the following incorrigibly optimistic point of view, Henry Ansley, is a well-known newspaperman of the Panhandle-Plains, on the staff of the Amarillo Globe-News, an original associate of Gene Howe and Wilbur Hawk. Henry does about everything around the shop from writing personals and pungent paragraphs to dining out on the paper—and now, "on his friends." A little depression now and then is nothing in his life. He has found a way out. This article is a bold-down address he has been delivering, with riotous success, at many places in the Globe-News's circulation territory.—Editor's Note.

I like the depression. No more prosperity for me. I have had more fun since the depression started than I ever had in my life. I had forgotten how to live, what it meant to have real friends, what it was like to eat common every-day food. Fact is, I was getting just a little high hat.

Then—And Now
Three years ago, only one man of the News-Globe organization could be depended on to leave the office and get back as soon as possible. Many times I have driven 100 miles to a banquet, sat through three 5-minute speeches, then drive the 100 miles back so as to be ready for work the next morning.

Nowadays many News-Globe employers as are invited make those trips and we stay as long as we want to. The whole outfit could leave the office now and it wouldn't make any difference.

I like the depression. I have time to visit my friends, to make new ones. Two years ago when I went to a neighboring town, I always stayed at the hotel. Now I go home with my friends, stay all night and enjoy homecooking. I have even spent the week-end with some of my friends.

They had driven through landscaped grounds and she had caught a glimpse of the swimming pool gleaming with stars. Steven had pointed out the stables and tennis courts, had spoken of golf and of boating.

Could this be home? Could this be heaven to her?

She had a sudden hysterical notion that he and she might be dropped into separate wings of the great house and be unable to find each other for days. When they were inside it was not like that at all.

They entered a long, softly lighted living room with strange gleams of copper from the walls and the soft shine of old and well worn furniture. The room was perfect even to a copper bowl of yellow roses on the coffee table beside a rosy wood fire lighted against the hearth.

"Oh—so much!"
"My darling, darling wife," he whispered.

There was something in that husky, whispered voice that filled her heart with panic. Not now—not now! Not until she had a little white—Steven must have read her face. When he was beside her he put an arm about her shoulder and led her to a place by the fire. She heard him speaking.

"We'll have that food," he said quietly. "The bells aren't connected and I'll have to find Ferguson."

With that he was gone. Ellen trembled as she saw that he had left the room. How good he was! She waited five minutes, 10 minutes, and with each passing moment she felt her courage revive. She began to wish that he would return.

Lying on the coffee table were the morning newspapers, still primly jacked and uncreased. Still glanced casually at the headlines, then began to turn the pages in search of a favorite columnist. As the society page flipped by, she paused.

the boys who have been kind enough to invite me.

Time, Neighbors, Clothes
It's great to drop into a store and feel that you can spend an hour or two or three or a half day just visiting and not feel that you are wasting valuable time. I like the depression.

I am getting acquainted with my neighbors. In the last six months I have become acquainted with folks who have been living next door to me for three years. I am following the Biblical admonition, "Love your neighbors." One of my neighbors has one of the best-looking wives I have ever seen. She is a dandy. I am getting acquainted with my neighbors and learning to love them.

Three years ago, I ordered my clothes from a merchant tailor—two and three suits at a time. All my clothes were good ones. I was always dressed up. But now, I have not bought a suit in two years. I am mighty proud of my Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes. When I dress up, I am dressed up and I don't mean maybe. I like the depression.

The Wife
Three years ago I was so busy and my wife was so busy that we didn't see much of each other, and consequently we sort of lost interest in each other. I never went home to lunch. About twice a week I went home for dinner—at 6:30 o'clock. I never had time to go anywhere with her. If I did go on a party, I could never locate her, since there was always a "blonde" or a "red-head" available. I didn't worry much about it.

My wife belonged to all the clubs in town. She even joined the young mothers club. We don't have any children, and we are enjoying life, in and between playing bridge and going to clubs, she was never at home.

We got stuck up and infatigable. We even took down the old family bed and bought a set of twin beds—on the installment plan.

When I would come home at night, if my wife was at home, she would already be in her bed and I would crawl in mine. If she came in first, it was vice versa.

Beds and Clubs
We like the depression. We have come down off our pedestal and are really living at my house now. The twin beds are stored in the garage and the old family affair is being used. We are enjoying life, in and between taking a hotwater bottle to bed these cold nights, she sticks her heels in my back, just like she did before Hoover was elected.

I haven't been out on a party in 18 months. I have lost my book of telephone numbers. My wife has dropped all the clubs. I believe we are falling in love all over again. I am pretty well satisfied with my wife. Think I will keep her, at least until she is forty and then if I feel like I do now, I may trade her for two twenties.

I am feeling better since the depression. I take more exercise. I walk to town and a lot of folks who used to drive Cadillacs are walking with me. I like the depression.

My digestion is better. I haven't been to see a doctor in a year. I can eat anything I want to.

Food
I am getting real, honest-to-goodness food. Three years ago, we had filet mignon once a week, now we have round steak with flour gravy. Then, we had roast breast of guinea hen, now we are glad to get soy-bosom with the buttons on it.

I like the depression. My salary has been cut to where I can't afford to buy lettuce and spinach and parsley and we can't afford to have sandwiches and frozen desserts and all that damnable stuff which has killed more good men than the World War.

I like the depression. Three years ago, I never had time to go to church. I played golf all day Sunday and besides I was so darned smart that there wasn't a preacher in West Texas who could tell me anything.

Now, am going to church regularly, never miss a Sunday. And if this depression keeps on, I will be going to prayer meeting before long.

I like the depression.

Debt of 75 Years To Be Paid Soon

OREGON, Ill. (UP)—A debt incurred nearly 75 years ago in Germany is to be paid to the late Ralph Kober, former Forrester blacksmith, according to word received by heirs here.

Kober, according to relatives, made a loan amounting to approximately $400 to a friend a number of years ago before coming to the United States.

Kober's friend never was able to repay the loan, but he made provision for it in his will which was filed in probate in a German court recently.

Ritz Film Draws Good Attendance

There happened to be a double attraction for women patrons, at least, at the Ritz Sunday. There were those favorite players, Carole Lombard, Ricardo Cortez and Paul Lukas starring in the feature picture, "No One Man," which was ably supported by a late Movietone News, a Mickey Mouse cartoon and a unique screen act, and on the side all the lady patrons received complimentary vials of the famous Gerly perfume. This week has been set aside as Personality Perfume week by the Addison Wadley company, and an attractive display of these popular perfumes are on display in the Ritz lobby.

"No One Man" is a picture that has an extra appeal for lady patrons also, for Miss Lombard wears some of the most beautiful gowns ever seen, in this picture. It is said to be almost a style show so far as extra ordinary feminine apparel is concerned.
