WASHINGTON, July 4, (AP)—The American people, celebrating today the 150th anniversary of their independence, are in the midst of an historic controversy as to the relative importance of liberty and security in the United States political system.

The Declaration of Independence, adopted by the Continental Congress at Philadelphia, July 4, 1776, gave first national and then world-wide currency to ideas of equality and liberty. These ideas until the last decade were almost universally accepted as the highest ideals of political philosophy.

These newly-emphasized ideas, that the masses should have greater guarantees against economic uncertainty have gained greater force since the depression commenced in 1929; they made Franklin D. Roosevelt the successful presidential candidate in 1932, and they will be discussed from every forum in the national campaign of 1936.

The question at issue undoubtedly will be the degree and manner in which the traditional ideas of civil liberty and individual initiative may be subordinated, or adapted, to the broad needs of society as a whole; that is to say, how far political democracy may be compromised by a more effective "economic democracy."

New Champions of Liberty
Freshening facts of a national issue is not so much the politician's official recognition as most representative of "big business" or powerful corporations as it has been the most articulate champions of "liberty" and "individualism," while "the man on the street" has seemed to concentrate over the assurance of employment, the safety of his home, farm or small investment.

In this great shift of national political interest, two distinct influences are at work. The courts, and probably a majority of politicians, measure events by the traditional principles of American political philosophy and their gradual evolution into a system of constitutional law.

The universities, however, have injected into United States political life a large number of trained economists, statisticians, sociologists and other experts whose concern is not so much the political tradition and the system of the law, but the actual facts of modern life as determined by observation and systematic research.

Great Influences
These two great influences of American life clashed before the Supreme Court during recent months, when some of the constitutional guarantees of individual rights were found in legal conflict with the social purposes of legislative measures as in the farm mortgage case.

Independence Day To Go Unheralded by Traditional Noisy Celebrations Here

With the majority of business houses, as indicated by a chamber of commerce poll yesterday, to be closed today but with no preparations for city-wide observance of July Fourth, the day promises to be a quiet one in Midland.

41 STUDENTS OF DENTON COLLEGE HERE WEDNESDAY

Forty-one women students of North Texas State Teachers College, Denton, who are on a six-day tour of New Mexico and West Texas, and the drivers of the two buses in which the group travels, made a stop for luncheon in Midland Wednesday.

All arrangements for the stop were made by the chamber of commerce. Midland literature and souvenirs were distributed to the visitors by the same organization.

Here's How They Celebrate Fourth at Coney Island

While West Texans divide their attention between rodeos, cowboy reunions and race meets, residents of the sweltering east take refuge today at seaside resorts. This typical Coney Island scene, filmed by a photographer of The Reporter-Telegram and NEA service, shows how many a New Yorker will observe Independence Day.

Brain Trusters Are Aimed at in Probe Proposed

WASHINGTON, July 3. (AP)—A thorough investigation by the house rules committee of lobbying on the utilities control bill was promised today by Speaker Byrns, coincident with the shaping of a similar inquiry in the senate.

"I am not a member of the rules committee, but knowing the chairman and membership of that committee," Byrns said, "I am confident that everyone can be quite sure the investigation will be full, fair, thorough and impartial."

FEMININE FANCIES

BY KATHLEEN EILAND

We've always heard that "every dog has his day." It seems to us that the day has arrived in this year of grace 1935 what with smart shops now advertising overnight bags for dogs.

People in this town are either having a quiet Fourth of July or having a Fourth of July on the quiet. They won't admit they are staging any celebrations in honor of our glorious independence, et cetera.

We always did like to stand on the sidelines and get a bird's-eye view of what was going on. Just for the fun of it we'd like to be one of the innocent bystanders and watch the facial expressions (and vocal ones, too) of one of the pillars of society in '76 while he observed a typical 1935 Fourth of July celebration.

Another thing we can never puzzle out is why when we have the money for a vacation trip, we never have the time, and when we have the time, we never have any money.

Life has been likened to various things, like ladders and ships, ocean waves, and even to such intangible things as a total loss. But the word that fits it most truly, we think, is "see-saw." Now up, now down. We can never say put. And wherever we are, we have to hold on tight for fear of what will happen next.

On the whole we object to amateurish attempts at philosophy on our part (solely as a concession to the feelings of others, you understand). But one should never be held too closely accountable for pre-holiday statements.

Immediately try to jump into it. I understand some local men were negotiating the other day to turn Midland back to the Indians, when they heard that some leading citizens had not taken stock in the fair association.

If some people didn't have plenty to wrangle about they couldn't be happy. I know men right here in town who spend half of their time thinking of something the newspaper ought to do, yet they don't even pay their subscriptions.

Comparisons Are Unfair to Child; Promote Complex

By OLIVE ROBERTS BARTON

I did something today I regret terribly. The eyes can be such traitors, and we do things before we know it. A glance can wound, and I know mine did.

Two small girls came into the hotel dining room with their mother. I had seen them before and stopped to talk to them. Both were friendly, but the dark one had star points in her eyes and was altogether charming.

In their little plaids dresses and great red hats at luncheon they were pictures, the one pale and piquant, the other fair and rounded. Both pretty, but the little blonde had a way of catching the eye first.

I looked over and grinned. Little brunette facing me smiled back, a lovely look on her face that said as plainly as if she had spoken, "We're friends, aren't we?"

Glance That Hurt

Then I behaved badly. Quite involuntarily my eyes turned to the other. She was busy fixing her hat. Back to the other, then, like a flash, but it was too late. She had turned, sideways, and I looked pensively at the floor.

Comparisons are odious, but in such a case, particularly so. To say, "Jim gets such good marks, Billy," or "Mary, it's so much harder to make you look nicer than Jane," is defeat pure and simple.

You may say that we live in a world where people are continually outshining us and we have to accept it. Yes, that's true, but it never

Advise Transients To Stay off Roads

AUSTIN, (AP)—Texas transients have been advised by relief officials to "settle down and stay off the road." Adam E. Johnson, Texas relief director, warned that federal officials had appealed to motorists and railroads to refuse free transportation to transients, and that transients would find "conditions no better at distant points." "Unless they have a job waiting for them somewhere," Johnson said, "Texans contemplating hitch-hiking trips ought to stay at home for other states and counties have their own unemployed." Warning the "people who offer free transportation are sometimes assaulted," Johnson counseled tourists not to pick up hitch-hikers and residents not to provide "hand-outs and small cash donations to persons making house-to-house canvasses." Transients on the road were instructed to go home or to nearest transient division camps, which are located near principal cities.

LIBERTY BELL TO TOLL 159TH FREEDOM YEAR

By ALBERT E. STEES United Press Staff Correspondent PHILADELPHIA, July 4. (U.P.)—At the stroke of noon today old Liberty Bell will toll out the 159th year of American independence. No longer capable of jubilantly proclaiming the severance of the United Colonies from the binding ties of England, the bell will ring only 15 times.

The old bell is still the heart of American freedom. This is attested by the large visitation made each year by tourists from the 48 states. So far this year approximately 300,000 people — school children and adults alike — have viewed the honored symbol. World War Revived Interest Its historic background and its place in the annals of the United States was most noticeably shown during the World War. In 1918, one million persons visited Independence Hall mostly to see the Liberty Bell.

handled very carefully. Only on special occasions has it been rung, and then only with a hand mallet. Last July 4 Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd rang the Liberty Bell by radio from the South Pole. Bell Aves Foreign Born Horace Carpenter, superintendent in charge of the historic buildings in Independence Square, said a large part of the visitors who view the bell are of foreign birth. "They stand there in solemn awe as they look at the Liberty Bell," he said, "just trying to comprehend the full significance which it represents."

agreements. "Men who in normal times paid their taxes and met their obligations should not be up off their property. With a near-normal year of single good wheat crop the Panhandle will come back." from 12 to 24 hours, succeeded by a 24-hour period of convalescence. At the end of the second day patients are up and about with no after-effects from the venom." Dr. Kemp said that efforts to treat the bite wound locally are useless. Immediately after insertion of the venom the wound closes and no exterior treatment is efficacious. "The physician should use an injection of 10 per cent epsom salts in the vein, which relieves contraction of the muscles and pain," the bacteriologist stated. Dr. Kemp said that scientists have known about and recognized the black widow spider as poisonous since 1720. The insects, he explained, are not vicious, are timid in fact, and will bite only if startled or if their nests are invaded. Their bite, he said, is really a sting, and the poison is injected through a hollow claw. The sting is not painful and in many cases is overlooked. They normally bite once and run although are capable of stinging any number of times. The black widow, he continued, are outdoor dwellers and are found mostly in rarely cleaned sheds, barns and outhouses and under piles of tin cans and other refuse. Their webs are of very fine silk, small, irregular, spattered with loose ends and form no sort of geometrical design. He cautioned that the young spiders are as venomous as the adults. They are small, light colored and usually striped. The full grown male has a body about the size of a red ant, with disproportionately long legs and bites like the rest of the family. Some comfort is given victims by his furnishing a meal for the female after mating.

of the word can this be called a recovery measure. There is nothing about it to put a single man or woman to work." Huddleston urged members of the House to protect the rights of the investors. He said that to wreak vengeance on utilities because of abuses of the past harms only the investors who put their savings in utility securities. Congressman Huddleston stated that the bill was written by Benjamin Cohen and Thomas Cochran, whom he termed "two bright young men" brought down from New York to "teach Congress how to shoot." "Some of us were here when both were yet in short pants," he said. "But there are days when experience and fidelity in public service or in business life are exceedingly 'disqualifying'."

"Men of the Hour" At Ritz Today Has Plenty of Action

There's plenty of dare-devilry in "Men of the Hour," showing at the Ritz Thursday only. Fires, ship disasters, airplane crashes, police raids, gangster killings—such are the scenes filmed by the daring newswire cameramen, represented in the picture by Richard Cromwell and Wallace Ford. Make 'em gasp and make 'em shiver must have been Lambert Lilley's guiding thought while he was directing Columbia's "Men of the Hour." Never once does this action-filled drama permit its spectators to relax. From the opening scene, in which Cromwell and Ford risk their lives to get the best shots of a burning building, until the breath-taking climax when Cromwell is pursued through the city streets by a death-car filled with bandits, the film maintains a lightning-fast pace. Young Cromwell, our favorite screen juvenile, is well cast as the fothead but sincere assistant cameraman. Ford, as the first cameraman who lets Cromwell do the dirty work while he collects the bonuses, delivers another of his well-rounded likeable performances. Billie Seward is featured opposite the two.

Qualification for Centennial Contest

COLLEGE STATION. (U.P.)—Any Texas farm family living on a farm or in a town of not more than 2,500 people on a designated state or federal highway is eligible to enter the Centennial farm and home demonstration contest, according to O. B. Young, director of the Texas A. & M. College Extension Service. The contest is to recognize and encourage improvement in agriculture and improvement and beautification of rural homes. Various business firms and individuals have already pledged cash prizes amounting to $2,500 for district and state winners. County and home demonstration agents will provide registration cards and receive applications of those who desire to enter the contest. Registration cards will be received until Sept. 1. Scoring will be on the following basis, a perfect score yielding 10,000 points: Building and equipment, 2,500 points; grounds, 1,000 points; soil, 1,500 points; crops, 1,500 points; livestock, 2,000 points; food supply and other resources, 1,500 points. Prizes will be awarded to district winners in each of the nine extension districts and to the state winners.
