Hoover Gets First Buddy Poppy of '32

President Herbert Hoover officially launched the eleventh annual distribution of Buddy poppies by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S., on April 11 when he received the first 1932 poppy from the hands of little Betty Joan Christian, age 4, a ward of the V. F. W. national home for the orphans of veterans at Eaton Rapids, Mich. Betty Joan was presented to President Hoover at the White House by Commander-in-Chief Harold D. DeCo, of Sacramento, Calif. Although the occasion was the importance of the occasion and her meeting with the chief executive of the nation, Betty Joan was perfectly calm and unperturbed throughout the ceremony. Betty's flashing smile won a responsive grin from President Hoover when she placed the Buddy poppy in the buttonhole of his lapel while a battery of newspaper cameras clicked. Following her visit to the White House, Betty was escorted to the offices of various dignitaries, including Secretary of War Patrick Hurley, General Frank T. Hines, administrator of veterans affairs, and prominent members of the house and senate. Betty Joan was born on Washington's birthday in 1928, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer Holmes Christian, Benton Harbor, Michigan. The father, a World War veteran, died in 1929, leaving Betty Joan, a brother and sister in the care of the mother. The three children were adopted at the V. F. W. national home in January, 1930, where they are being reared under the care of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S. The custom of selecting a child from among those at the V. F. W. national home for this annual White House ceremony was inaugurated in 1930. This project at Eaton Rapids is more or less symbolic of the V. F. W. service and welfare program as a whole and the V. F. W. national home receives annually one cent from each Buddy poppy that is distributed by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S. The custom of inaugurating each annual Buddy poppy sale by the presentation of a Buddy poppy to the President was first begun during the first year of President Harding's administration and has been perpetuated annually since that time by former President Calvin Coolidge and President Hoover.

MIDLAND WATCHES NEW BILL

New Post Office Is At Stake; Wire Received

The following wire was received in Midland this morning from Congressman Ewing W. Thomason: 'The Garner relief bill introduced today provides a $100,000 postoffice building for Midland. I cannot predict what action congress will take on this measure but will do everything I can to secure this needed federal building.'

Bearing the approval of house democrats, the $2,100,000 Garner relief bill was completed last night almost a week ago. The bill provides for the construction of a public works program would be a 'shock to public confidence.' The Garner bill carries a $1,047,000,000 public works provision. It also would provide $10,000,000 to be administered by President Hoover for direct relief and could add $1,000,000,000 to the capital of the reconstruction corporation for loans to states, cities, counties, individuals and corporations that could furnish property. However, the measure provides for a tax of one-fourth of a cent a gallon on gasoline to meet the interest and sinking fund requirements on the bonds issued by the corporation. The measure removes restrictions on the reconstruction finance corporation and gives it broad latitude in order that loans may be made to 'aid in financing agriculture, commerce and industry and other products and to assist in the relief of unemployment.'

Arrangements are rapidly being completed by the members of the Brooks W. Lee Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S. in anticipation of its 1932 distribution of Buddy poppies to be conducted on the streets of Midland Saturday and Monday. 'When the citizens of this community contribute to the welfare and relief of disabled and needy veterans and their dependents by purchasing a Buddy poppy they have the assurance of knowing that every penny they give is to be used exclusively for that purpose,' declared a Vets official in a statement telling of the aims and purposes of the annual Buddy poppy distribution. 'Former President Calvin Coolidge painted a graphic picture of the objectives of this movement when he described it as one that perpetuates and emphasizes a particularly fine symbolism, calling to mind the supreme sacrifices of those who died in the service of our country.'

Motor Cop's Memory Results in Three Being Jailed Here

The memory of a motorcycle patrolman resulted in three Californians being lodged in the Midland county jail Thursday afternoon. Riding westward, two state officers met a large sedan with a California license plate. Less than a mile away, one turned in his saddle and said, 'Say, I've got the number of that car in my book somewhere.' They whipped about and, sirens screaming, sped through the down town business section at more than 60 miles an hour. Just east of Midland they arrested the driver of the car and two men with him. The men are held in jail on suspicion while wires are awaited from peace officers in California.

MAYOR DENIES CHARGE

Says Agent Acted in Minor Financial Capacity

NEW YORK, May 27. (UP)—Hundreds of thousands of dollars handled by the missing Russell T. Sherwood were hinted as linked with Mayor Walker as Samuel Seabury addressed his investigating committee. 'If the transactions were on behalf of anybody other than the mayor,' said Seabury, 'then there was no reason for Sherwood to flee.' Seabury is trying to establish a link between Walker and Sherwood. Walker swears that Sherwood was not his agent. 'He merely acted in my minor financial and domestic matters, like paying the grocery bill,' Walker declared.

Body of B'Spring Farmer Is Found

BIG SPRING.—The body of T. G. Wafer, 53, was found hanging in the loft of a large barn on the E. B. Brown farm 17 miles northwest of Big Spring about noon Thursday. Tom Belcher discovered the body. Wafer, who had resided on the farm about 2 1/2 years and worked for O. Free, had taken off his hat, placed his eye glasses upon it, tied a rope to a rafter in the top of barn and dropped from the foot six feet. His neck was not broken and he apparently died from strangulation. No note was found by Sheriff Jess Slaughter, who was called to the scene and ordered the body brought to the Eberly Funeral home. Wafer had no known near relatives. Sheriff Slaughter said he might have a sister living and that Jim Kenchick, residing west of town, was his nephew.

Two Ward County Wells Reach Oil

Production has been developed in one well at oil has been struck in another near Eastland Oil Co.'s No. 1 Shell-Weiss, southeastern Ward county's largest producer, which meanwhile has been making around 300 barrels a day with tools recovered at 2,361 feet. The well will be deepened, the big pay having been struck only at 2,360 feet. 'The work of distributing Buddy poppies is done by volunteer citizens who give of their time and effort as a contribution to the cause of veteran welfare. In this way, the entire proceeds are left available for the welfare activities. The Buddy poppies themselves are made by disabled veterans in government hospitals. These men are paid for their labor and in this manner hundreds of disabled veterans are provided with their only source of income.'

A well known business man here said, concerning the poppy drive: 'The wearing of a Buddy poppy—the flower that symbolizes the welfare program of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the U. S.—has become a fixed custom in connection with the annual observance of Memorial day. 'The proceeds from the Buddy poppy sale are used for a splendid type of welfare work in which the veterans are still carrying on. To do all to help the sale of poppies is the slightest and easiest gesture to show the men who offered to their country their lives and their future welfare, that we are still mindful of their sacrifice and of our obligation. The appeal will not be in vain. 'The public has never looked upon the sale of Buddy poppies as belonging among the drives which have become so wearisome. Perhaps it is the poppy's poetic birth which has appealed to everyone, but if the sale itself was actually discontinued by the veterans, we still believe that poppies would be demanded for general use on Memorial day in memory of Flanders fields. On that account, and because once a year they afford to everyone a way to render proper reverence to the known and unknown soldiers, we are glad that this year they will be offered once again.'

'I see in the Buddy poppy movement a practical significance for they are made by men disabled in the World War and the proceeds of their sale throughout the country (See POPPY SALE page 6)

A GOOD IDEA?

Congressman Maas of Minnesota seems to have popped to the surface with a very bright idea. He has proposed that the office of postmaster be abolished in all cities where postal receipts run over $18,000 a year. In that way, he says, the government will save no less than $10,000,000 a year. He explains his proposal as follows: First class postmasters, and many second class postmasters as well, he says, are almost all political campaign workers. They get their jobs because they have served the dominant party. The actual work of running their offices is done by an assistant postmaster or superintendent of mails, who is a civil service employe. Consequently, Mr. Maas suggests that the postmasters be disposed with. The postoffice would be run just as they are run now, and the taxpayers would be relieved of the necessity of rewarding faithful political hacks. It sounds like a pretty fair sort of idea.

Add Gasoline Bootlegger to The Racketeering Business

The big city bootlegger who does his racketeering in liquor has an apt imitator in a country cousin, the bootlegger of gasoline. The gasoline bootlegger has built up such an extensive racket that the American Petroleum Institute has joined various states in a fight against these lawbreakers. States levying gasoline taxes ranging from 2 to 7 cents a gallon, collect about $500,000,000 annually from this form of revenue. This figure would be increased by $60,000,000, it is estimated, if the gasoline bootlegger were not operating. The machinations of this racketeering ring involves a producer, a shipper and a selling agent. Sirreptitious shipment and substitution are the main trade secrets of the gangs. Because gasoline is a legal product, in contrast with the unlawful sale of liquor, the gasoline "legger" has more opportunities of pawing off his wares.

In an effort to prevent gasoline bootleggers from bringing gasoline into Pennsylvania from other states, free of tax, the Pennsylvania state highway patrol has organized a river patrol. Above is the crew of one of the patrol boats operating on the Delaware and Schuylkill rivers.

Several ways are used in getting rid of the gas without paying tax. Sometimes the illegal dealer buys gasoline in one state and trucks it across state lines after dark, selling to a dishonest filling station operator and splitting the tax with him. Again he may buy from the refinery for apparent shipment out of the state and then divert his purchase to filling stations within the state. Another way is to resort to false bills of lading or false returns for tax purposes. The result of any of these operations is the same—the dishonest filling station operator has gasoline to sell which the taxing authorities know nothing about. In Oklahoma these illegal operators "sipped" the state out of more than $2,041,000 in 22 months. Illinois reports a loss of from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000 a year. Other states report large losses. This loss directly reverts back to the motorist. About 95 per cent of the gasoline tax collections are used for construction of state and county roads. With this loss in revenue, the motorist whose purchase of gasoline keeps the bootlegger in business, is hit directly. In many cases gasoline bootleggers "cut" their product something in the manner of the liquor bootlegger. In this practice the motorist loses, because the addition of kerosene and other non-taxable products are said to be injurious to the modern car. The battle campaign of the states and the American Petroleum Institute, are revealed by Paul E. Hadtke, secretary of the marketing division, has experienced creditable success against the illegal sale of gasoline in the past few months. Complete collection of revenue is only one objective of the campaign. It is hoped by efficient and thorough enforcement of adequate statutes, to protect motorists from damage to their cars by inferior grades of fuel. By running these "leggers" to earth, it is thought that the demoralization of gasoline markets by the sale of tax free fuels will end, and that the substitution of inferior gasolines and oil for products of established reputation, will be brought to a stop. State Treasuries Lose Although established gasoline marketers have lost substantial business to the racketeers, state treasuries are the biggest losers, the average gasoline tax being greater than the average profit per gallon of fuel, the American Petroleum Institute reports. In states where gasoline tax laws admittedly lack "teeth," an effort will be made to have them creasing consideration being given the plan by both lawmakers and industrialists. Last fall Commissioner McDonald proposed this plan as a sound and permanent manner in which to reduce unemployment and since that time many methods to put it into effect have been suggested.

The commissioner said his correspondence indicated many financiers are giving serious thought to it. It is conservatively estimated that there are between seven and nine million unemployed in the United States," he said. "Many of these are permanently, not just temporarily displaced from their jobs, in industrial and commercial centers because of the installation of modern labor-saving machinery. Many of these unemployed are of our finest type of citizens, who have contributed to the support of our government, schools, and all constructive endeavors. The unemployed, confronted with the problem of finding some means of livelihood, must turn to one of two places—the government dole, as symbolized by the bread line, or be established on a farm, the prime source of our wealth. If they turn to the farm it must not be for the purpose of making a quick fortune but to earn a living. "Life in industrial and commercial centers has given to many of the families now unemployed, advantages of education and society and when re-established on farms they will become real assets to our rural communities and will contribute to the upbuilding of our rural life, which is so essential to the welfare of our nation."

Commissioner McDonald pointed out that many plans for effecting a nation-wide back-to-the-farm movement have been suggested. Some have proposed that it be sponsored by private organizations and private capital, others that the state government finance the project and others that the federal government take responsibility for it. T. M. Dess, of Midlothian, a candidate for the legislature from El Paso county, has been identified with many constructive programs, proposes state sponsorship of the movement in his platform. "The very fact that the federal government has appropriated two billion dollars to refinance private concerns is evidence that the individuals do not have the funds to finance this project," he said. "The several states neither have the power to print currency nor the money. That leaves it to the federal government as possessor of the only practical means of establishing finance for this project. "Congress can appropriate a sum of money to be used as a revolving fund, which would be sufficient to finance a back-to-the-farm movement. As an illustration: After congress has appropriated funds, unemployed man No. 1 would be furnished $3,000 to establish him on a farm. He would give 30 bonds of $100 denomination, payable over a period of 30 years at a nominal rate of interest. These bonds, secured by the property, could then be placed with the treasury and against them $3,000 in currency issued. The new issue of $3,000 could be used to finance No. 2 on the same plan. "By that means the federal government could furnish funds to re-establish its own citizens, who through taxation and through service in time of peace and war, sustain our government, which has loaned many millions of dollars to rehabilitate people in foreign countries. "Such a program would give constructive and permanent employment with hope of substantial gain in the future to a large proportion of the country's seven to nine million unemployed. "The prime object of re-establishing families should be to engage in diversified agriculture, the producing of abundant food and feed crops, the improvement of their homes and farms, the upbuilding of soil fertility, the beautification of farm homes and the further improvement of rural life. "This is the psychological time for such a constructive program, for land is at reasonable prices, lumber is cheaper than it has been for many years, transportation facilities are with sufficient business and the laborer needs employment. "It is to be further noted that the federal land banks have already taken over thousands of farms and inevitably must take over thousands more. Such farms as these could be utilized in the national back-to-the-farm movement, for such utilization ultimately could prevent future losses to the federal land banks. Farm loan companies and all other forms of business that have been forced to take over farms likewise could profitably cooperate and find a market for their lands. "Inasmuch as land and agriculture is the source of our wealth, the benefits of such a movement would insure to all classes—primarily, of course, to our unemployed, who must be given constructive work before this country can again have prosperity."

Winston Borum attended the luncheon of both clubs this week. It was rumored that he would umpire the game and he seemed highly receptive for propositions from either side.

Congress is talking of cutting out polo ponies for army flyers, as an economy move. Much as I dislike to hear of this I would suggest that they go on now and cut out spurs from the officer's boots. This would be a big saving on desks, and office furniture within a year.

Saturday and Monday will be popular sale days here. The Veterans of Foreign Wars will hold the annual sale to provide funds for the disabled veterans. And on Sunday night there will be a union church service in honor of disabled vets. These are tough times, folks, but we want to come across the best we can and help the poppy sale go over.

Monday and Tuesday will be the celebration at Odessa. There's a chance to pay our neighbors a visit and also get a good four bits worth of rodeo and horse races. We ought to have a good crowd over there Monday afternoon to help open the show. The new grounds may be reached easily by driving north about three miles on the Andrews paved highway.

Albert Legg is reported to have told the Rotary club that it was a big job to move the Texas Electric offices over in the Petroleum building, but that it was a still bigger job to prorate the expense on the various electric bills this month.

Fish cannot close their eyes and therefore they are unable to sleep in the ordinary sense of that term as applied to mammals. They have periods of less activity during the day and during that time they rest.

CHAPTER III The lamp at the head of the bed threw a dull, yellowish light over the sleeping figure of a young woman.

Her bare arms were thrown loosely forward. One white firm breast showed above the filmy light pink nightdress that she had on. The covers were half thrown back; an opened magazine lay face downward on the bed where it had fallen when the young woman was overcome by sleep.

A bell was ringing, intermittently at first, and then with steady clamor. The sleeper stirred uneasily, and at length opened her eyes, one hand unconsciously pulling her night dress over the exposed breast. The persistent ringing continued.

'Who's there? What's the matter?' she called.

'It's me, Lil,' came the suppressed and eager voice of Judge Moffett.

Lil Baker uttered a confused little exclamation of surprise and, now wide awake, shot back the bolt. She gave a little gasp as she saw Moffett, the light from the room shining on his face. His hat was carelessly pushed on the back of his head, his collar was wild, his tie awry.

'What's the idea of coming here at four o'clock in the morning?' Lil asked.

'Nothing. They won't do anything. I've got to stay here and see it. What if I want you out here by eight o'clock in the morning, I don't want them to put you on the stand and cross-examine you until you'd spill everything you know.'

Lil's face brightened. 'I know. I'll go to Paris. I've always longed—'

'You'll do nothing of the sort. Get the idea out of your head at once. You'll go downtown to a cheap neighborhood, where you can lay low. I can't stop to talk now—'

At that same hour a long conference among four sober, elderly men was coming to an end. A thin, intellectual looking man with a close-cropped white mustache seemed to be the leading spirit of the group.

Beside his chair stood a man of a different stamp—short, thick set, bulldog face. He might have been taken by almost any crowd of gangsters for a detective at sight. In fact, he was a detective, employed by Supreme Court Justice Osgood and the other judges investigating the conditions of the city magistrates—one of them in particular, Madigan, tell us what you have found out—well, about Judge Moffett, say.

'Well, sir, this Judge Moffett is a pretty gay bird. He's keeping a girl named Lil Baker in a Park avenue apartment, which costs him some dough. And besides that, she has her own car, and everything. You gents know how long a magistrate's salary would last with such expenses piling up.'

'I don't think we will go into that now, Mr. Madigan,' said one of the judges hastily—a trifle too hastily. It was Judge Blake, of the Superior Court, who had the reputation of being quite a ladies' man.

Judge Manville looked at him with an amused side glance.

'No,' he agreed. 'Judge Moffett's amatory affairs do not at the moment concern us.'

Judge Osgood, if he saw the little byplay between his two associates, did not betray a sign of it.

'Madigan, I want that woman watched,' he said. 'All the time. Moffett will try to spirit her away once his suspicions are aroused.'

'I'll take care of it myself, sir.'

'What about Moffett's court clerk?' said Judge Manville. 'Is he cutting up something of a figure—ah! socially?'

'He's got a four thousand a year flat and a four thousand a year salary,' replied Madigan, 'and it's hard to make them jibe.'

Judge Blake turned his eyes towards the detective. 'Doesn't he get what grumpy. Yes, he a nudist—able to get along without—'

Osgood interrupted him. 'Madigan, find out how Moffett's clerk does it.'

'Do you think he can be made to talk?' asked Blake.

'Everybody can be made to talk,' replied the detective, dryly.

'All right, Madigan,' said Osgood. 'Keep on the job.'

The detective raised his hand in a half-salute to the Superior Court Justice and quickly left the room.

'And this, gentlemen,' continued the presiding officer of the investigation, 'is the beginning. As soon as our public sessions begin I'll drag Moffett out into the open. We will go through all of his bank accounts, find out what money he's got, where he got it and where he keeps it; how much he spends on his—establishment; what his investments are.'

'Where does he bank?' asked Judge Blake.

'Up to now we don't know. He's got a small checking account in one bank, but it doesn't amount to anything. That's what I want the girl for. Maybe she'll tell us.'

'Aren't we laying too much stress on Moffett and his court?' asked Judge White, an elderly, white-bearded, jovial-faced man.

'No, we are not,' said Judge Osgood. 'I can't over-emphasize the importance of the task that we have set ourselves. That's what emphasize the evils that exist in the lower courts. They are the root of all the evils in our body politic. Without the assistance of the magistrature in the Night Courts, corruption in politics could not long exist. Out of Moffett and men like him, come the graft and corruption which is spreading over this country like a pestilence. Dirty money—the wages of sin—the rewards of crimes committed or ignored. That's what we have to fight, gentlemen. Political power for sale; preference at bargain rates; judges for hire. We don't cut down a tree at the top, but at the root, and the root of this tree we have been designated to cut down is—Moffett! I'll tear up that root. I pledge my life to this work.'

With your help, gentlemen, I'll put these crooks where they belong. We will turn New York into a clean city for clean people—an American city, gentlemen, built by Americans for Americans—and, by the grace of God, free!

Early morning in the Bronx; the streets lined with cheap apartment houses, a few belated milk wagons, shop-keepers opening their stores; dirty-faced kids on the street playing leap frog; women seated on the steps or leaning out of windows; now and then a taxicab.

Along the street in a plain tailored coat, passed a young woman, suitcase in hand. She scanned the front windows of the buildings, hesitating now and then, stopping to glance across the street, a look of disgust, passing over her face.

She continued down the street; and paused before a red-brick apartment house, dingy yet not so dingy as its neighbors; a cheap cardboard sign at the entrance announced a 'VACANCY.' The girl climbed the steps and rang the janitor's bell. Between her glove and the cuff of her coat gleamed a diamond bracelet. As she waited a taxicab turned into the garage next door.

The driver of the cab, a middle-sized man of twenty-five or so, with short cropped brown curly hair, clear gray eyes, a night's stubble of beard on his face, yawned as he brought the car to a stop in the garage. He stretched lazily, swung out of the cab, opened the back door and began picking up things from the floor.

'Hello, Mike! Have a good night?' A garage mechanic approached him, a friendly smile on his face. The chauffeur withdrew his body from the cab and turned to the speaker.

'I'll say I did! He held out a hand filled with hairpins. 'There are more in the car.' He leaned back in the taxi and began collecting the rest.

'Collect a lot of junk don't you?' said the mechanic.

'Yeah—everything but wedding rings!' said the chauffeur withdrawing his hand from the taxi. In his hand was a bit of silk and lace.

'Someone lost a hand—' He stopped abruptly, shook out the article in his hands—a pair of lace and chiffon panties! The two men eyed each other blankly for a moment, then Mike grinned. 'Well—somebody lost something.'

He threw the panties and the hairpins into a bin of waste on the garage floor, picked up a small paper box from the driver's seat and tucked it under his arm.

'Say, Pete, give the bus a shave and a haircut, will you?'

'O and also K.' With another yawn the chauffeur strode out of the garage and found himself in the way of a football which struck the side of his face. He picked up the football and found a group of urchins up the street laughing and grinning at him.

'Hey! That's not the way to kick a football!' he shouted to them. 'Watch this!'

He placed the football carefully, took a short run and kicked it gently. Instead of going up street toward the boys, the football curved to one side and smashed a shop window. At the sound of the breaking glass the young boys gave a yell of derision and broke into a run. Mike Thomas, the chauffeur, stopped to speak to a young Jewish woman carrying a market basket and a baby. She smiled as he stopped at her side.

'Good morning, Mr. Thomas.'

'Good morning, yourself. How's the baby getting on?'

'She's teething awful hard.'

'Try rubbin' her gums with a thimble,' said Mike with a sympathetic desire to be of aid. 'That's what we did.'

'I gave her a bacon rind to chew on,' said the woman, 'but my husband made me stop it. He says it ain't kosher.'

'Well, maybe it ain't kosher to grow teeth,' said Mike, and ascended the steps to the apartment house next to the garage. At the entrance stood the young woman with the suitcase, wearily pushing the janitor's bell.

'Excuse me,' she said, 'but how can I get the janitor. I've been ringing the bell for five minutes.'

'Easy,' said Mike pleasantly, with a brief glance at her face, 'but not that way. The bell don't ring.'

He leaned over the railing between the girl and the bell and shouted down: 'Hey! Herman! You got a customer!'

A moment later Herman stuck his sleepy head out of the janitor's door, looking up. When he saw the chauffeur he smiled: 'O. K., Mike. Coming up.'

Mike nodded to the young woman and was passing into the hallway when she dropped her handkerchief. He did not even grin at the obvious attempt to prolong the interview. He picked it up, handed it carelessly to her, remarking over his shoulder, 'You dropped your handkerchief.'

She watched him start up the stairs, half inclined to be angry. 'Of all the fresh—' she thought, and saw him bend his head over the stairway railing as an old grizzled man stuck his head out of the hall doorway and cry 'Hsst!' and beckon to Mike. The latter went over to the doorway and the old man said something so low that Lil Baker could not hear what it was.

'O and also K,' said Mike, and followed the old man into his apartment.

The janitor then made his appearance, chewing a bit of the breakfast coffee cake in his hand.

'What kind of an apartment have you got for rent?' she asked.

'The sweetest one in the house, Miss. Up this way.'

She followed him up two flights, looked over the cheap and ordinary three-room furnished-apartment. She asked the amount of the rent, profusely, and paid it without argument for a month in advance.

'I hope you'll like it,' said the janitor.

'It's swell,' said Lil, and closed the door on Herman. She began to unpack her bag on the bed, but stopped to look about.

'What a dump!' she said aloud.

A baby began to cry in the apartment next door, its increasing wail clearly through the thin partition.

'God's gift to women!' cried Lil, raising her hands in a gesture of disgust.

PLEASE, MOTHER, CAN I HAVE A SHAMPOO? IT MAKES MY HAIR SO SOFT AND NICE.

Clean as a whistle

When rough-and-tumble youngsters rub the dirt right into their skins—and they all do—it takes lots of good lather to get it out again! Ordinary soaps don't dissolve freely enough—especially if the water is the least bit hard. They give a stingy lather, leave a dirty, soapy film on skin and hair. What's needed is a special soap—and no soap softens and loosens dirt, in any water, like Kirk's Coco Hardwater Castile.

Oceans of lather—instantly!

Here's the difference: Kirk's is made from 100% pure coconut oil. It bursts into lather instantly—even in the hardest, coldest water. It rinses off completely—leaving skin and hair as fresh and clean as a spring morning. Body odors disappear like magic. Try it today—for hands, for bath, for a wonderful shampoo. And for economy! Of the four leading toilet soaps, Kirk's is half again larger, yet the price is the same! Avoid imitations. Look for the arrows. Always ask for Kirk's by name.

Rainy days are unpleasant enough without having to contend with salt that won't pour. Avoid this annoyance by asking your grocer for Morton's Iodized Salt. LAYING THE FOUNDATION FOR GOOD TEETH

(From U. S. Public Health Service)

The foundation for sound teeth is laid before the child is born. When an infant comes into the world, it is apparently toothless; but within the jaws or gums are the teeth that are commonly called "milk teeth" or "baby teeth." These first teeth are partly completed at birth, so we can see that important influences have already been at work in preparing them. The best care we can give our teeth is to provide nature with the necessary materials for building them soundly.

It is necessary that the mother, both before the arrival of the baby and during the nursing period, should have the foods suitable to the demands being made upon her. She must have lime phosphorus and other mineral salts if the teeth are to be properly constructed. These phosphates and salts may be found in a variety of foods such as fruits (best of which are oranges), fresh vegetables (especially tomatoes), milk, eggs, meat and plenty of fresh water.

The first baby teeth begin to show through the gums usually when the child is between six and nine months of age. The formation of the hard, dense covering known as enamel, had already been completed for these teeth but in other parts of the mouth tooth building is still going on in teeth yet hidden.

Two things are to be remembered at this point: first, the child must henceforth obtain its food from other than the mother; and second, the tooth-building is still going on with its demands for lime and phosphates. To meet these demands, the growing baby should have quantities of pure cow's milk, supplemented later by fruit juices, vegetables, and at times, cod liver oil.

Life is the crucial period in the history of his teeth. About the sixth year the first permanent tooth makes its appearance. It is a molar and appears directly back of the last baby tooth. This is the most important tooth in the mouth. It is sometimes called the keystone of the entire dental arch and plays an important role in the proper formation of the jaws. Because it comes so early, it is often mistaken for a baby tooth and neglected. Such a mistake is indeed a sad one for the child.

During the period of construction and hardening of the permanent teeth, as well as all through life, it is of the utmost importance that a properly balanced diet be followed in order of supply nature with the necessary building material.

LIONS AND ROTARIANS MEET IN FREE ANNUAL BALL GAME TONIGHT

ALL TIME RECORD OF HITS, RUNS AND ERRORS EXPECTED TO VANISH; TO PLAY ON NEWLY LIGHTED FIELD

Without the services of the hard-hitting, flat-footed "Casey" Wemple, chances for a Rotarian win over the Lions in the annual night playground ball challenge affair of Midland service clubs is slim. The game starts at 8 o'clock tonight on the Scharbauer diamond, South Main street.

Joe Pyron, manager of the Rotarians, has collected a formidable line-up, however, which includes the Brobdignagan John Bonner on third base, the Rev. J. A. McCall on short and Paul Vickers behind the bat. Their tracks and yet control most of the territory lying between and Vickers, inasmuch as Ty Pratt is doing the pitching, is not expected to have anything to do except when his batting turn comes.

Pyron's complete lineup was announced this morning: Ty Pratt—pitcher Paul Vickers—catcher John Bonner—third Clarence Scharbauer—first Leon Goodman—second Preacher McCall—short John Mitchell—right field Paul Barron—utility W. G. Riddle—center Elliott Barron—left Substitutes: D. McCormick, John Howe, Legg, C. Hiett, Upham, Lawrence, Haag, Pemberton, Ryan, R. Barron, C. Barron, Wadley, Walker and Pyron.

LIONS CONFIDENT

"Doc" Ratliff, drilling mentor of the opposition, has his own ideas about throwing together a Lions club.

The speculation uppermost in most fans' minds is who can give up the most hits, Oreck or Pratt, or who can let more balls fall around them.

PONDER RETURNS TO FORT WORTH; BOND ARRANGED

SAN ANGELO, May 27. (UP)—William T. Ponder was at liberty today on a $1,500 bond signed by Dr. Webb Walker and A. P. Barrett, prominent aviation figures.

Ponder said the beer was not a commercial proposition and he was just taking a sporting chance.

Ponder shot down 11 German airplanes during the World war and gained many decorations but Bobbie Dual, flyer hired by federal customs officers, forced him down here with a load of contraband beer.

They read on the ground that, in a fit of desperate effort to shake off his pursuer, Ponder fluttered to a landing, ran his wheels along the ground and intended to zoom away.

Il Duce's Play Is Indication He Has France Suspected

LONDON.—Great as Napoleon Bonaparte was, he missed his way because he chose the French and not the Italian path that his Corsican blood should have caused him to follow.

Such seems to be the settled belief of that other famous Italian, Benito Mussolini, who recently took time out from his busy career as Italy's dictator to write a play in which his distrust of the French is only thinly veiled.

Mussolini's drama presents a picture like the Hundred Days, which recently has been shown in a London theatre, observers find political significance.

When Napoleon was at the top of his form, the French gladly followed him. He won them victories, expanded his territory.

In a later passage, Mussolini makes his Napoleon say these words so scathing to Frenchmen: "I should not have trusted myself to France. I should have built a united Italy. There I should not have been betrayed."

The red-petaled poppy that flamed in Flanders fields became so intimately associated with our impressions and memories of the World War that it still symbolizes that period of soul stress.

Guests at a California hotel were bothered by croaking bull frogs disturbing their sleep at night.

When Napoleon was at the top of his form, the French gladly followed him. He won them victories, expanded his territory.

Since his first outstanding talkie role in "The Criminal Code," Boris Karloff has become one of the most important actors in Hollywood.

This picture is described as a thrilling mystery of a fiendish, dreadful figure, who practiced unbelievable cruelties on those who opposed him; he is responsible for a literal reign of terror.

George Bancroft Is At Yucca Saturday

The explosive war-time career of a famous "mystery ship" is re-enacted for the purpose of numerous scenes in "The World and the Flesh," latest George Bancroft picture, which comes to the re-opened Yucca theatre for a Saturday night preview and a Sunday and Monday run.

The ship is the Playa de Ensenada, one-time American army transport which was subsequently used for many months as a North Sea scourge of rapacious enemy submarines in those submarine-infested waters during the World war.

One of the world's rarest stamps, the one-cent magenta of 1855 issued by British Guiana, once changed hands for the sum of $35,000.
