Captain Jim Cook, Warrior ARREST MADE IN Of Indian Times, To Speak 'WOMAN' ROBBERY

Captain Jim Cook, veteran Indian fighter who roamed over West Tex-as while held captive by the Co-manche Indians, is in Midland and will speak tonight between 7 and 8 o'clock on the court house lawn. He extends an invitation for every-one to be present and hear tales of big heir roising expressions in the hair-raising experiences in the his hair-raising experiences in the early days. Boy scouts are especially invited. Captain Cook spoke to the Lions club Wednesday. He had just come from Big Spring where he addressed the Lions club, spoke at the annual picnic of the old settlers and adressed the boy scouts in a public meeting. During his life Mr. Cook has been States Army, Texas ranger, peace of-ficer, on trail with the first Texas herd to Kansas, and foreman of the famous XIT ranch. Events leading to his capture by Comanches were recalled by Mr. Cook. At the time, he was 12 years old, but running a ranch at the mouth of the Llano river left by his father missing, Cook trailed them to a big sink where Indians had left them while going after other herds. Being thirsty, he dismounted, and quaffed from the clear waters of the fork running into the sink. Suddenly his horse jumped. Cook sprank to his feet, jerked his cap and ball revolver, and whirled to see what had scared his horse. But two braves were already on him. While one held him, the other sliced all his lower garments from him, signifying that the paleface was now a mem-ber of the Indian tribe. "They didn't kill me because I was just the right age," he said "At the time I was 12, just old enough that I could live on their diet, and yet not so old but what I could ab-sorb Indian ways." However, all that saved his life, he recounted, was some old stale bread an Indian squaw had picked up possibly years before. Dirt and grease were scraped off the slabs of crust and Cook ate them until his constitution became adjusted to the Indian all-meat diet.

Own Food He cooked and prepared his own menu. He baked his meat, then sliced it, hanging it on a raw hide line to dry. He then ate it at his leisure. While foster son of the tribe he was forced to scalp a dead white around the base of the scalp, and then peeled and cut much as one skinning a beef. Once the scalp was removed, he cut a hole in the top, inserting a piece of rawhide, and strung it on his belt. "The one that had the most scalps was the bravest," he declared. JOHNSTOWN, Aug. 4. So well did the Comanche chief like Cook that he gave his 16-year-old daughter to him in the most colorful wedding Seevela ever saw. VON PAPEN AND HITLER

When Von Papen and his crowd established their dictatorship in Prussia, the first question the rest of the world asked was, "Where do Hitler and his Fascists come in on this?"

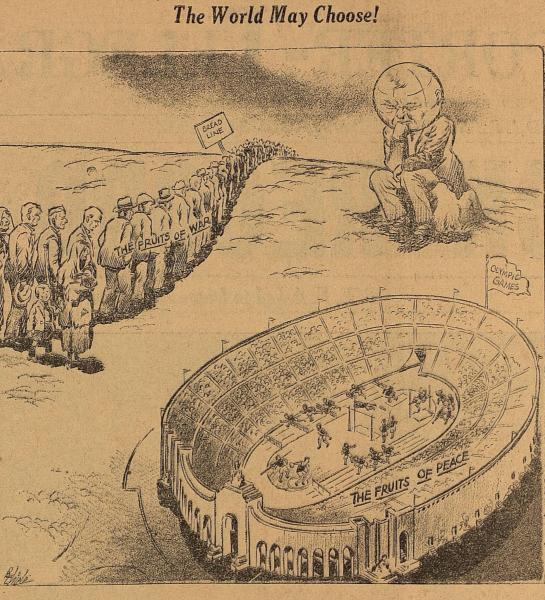

It is beginning to be evident that they don't come in at all; and the world at large will count that excellent news.

Von Papen represents the old Junker aristocracy, and that aristocracy never had a great deal of use for Hitler. For one thing, they realized perfectly well that he was a windbag without much real ability; for another, they distrusted him as an outsider, a foreigner, a man not of the Junker class. They tolerated him only because some of his aims coincided with some of their own.

But apparently they are not going to play ball with him much longer; and a world which saw in his irresponsible mouthings a definite threat to peace will be very glad of it.

The citizen probably never will realize this, for the payment will not be made in taxes.
