GALSWORTHY GONE; AN ERA WITH HIM

The death of John Galsworthy not only removes from the scene one of England's most distinguished novelists. It helps to mark the passing of an era—helps to mark it precisely as his own novels did.

For Galsworthy was the historian of a class and a time which seem to have been doomed to death by world changes. He wrote of the people who gave England its tone through the fifty years preceding the World War; the upper-class folk who, in the last analysis, directed the empire, set up the social and political codes by which it lived and shaped for themselves a life which seemed to be beyond change.

This was a class with very great virtues and very great limitations—a statement which, perhaps, could apply to Galsworthy himself.

The class made the British empire great, beyond dispute. It sent its sons out to administer colonies, to open backward lands for settlement, to fill the vast network of civil and military positions made necessary by the great scope of the empire's activities. It bred into them a sense of the responsibilities entailed by its privileges.

It was Mr. Galsworthy's great gift to understand that class completely and to write of it so that other people could understand it and sympathize with it too. A future historian wanting to discover just what upper class Englishmen of the empire's heyday were like, what they talked about and how they felt and what they believed in, will hardly be able to do better than to get acquainted with Mr. Galsworthy's Forsytes and Charwells.

Yet this class had a certain blindness, somehow. The world moved out from under it. Perhaps it was blasted out by the guns of Ypres and the Somme, or perhaps the docks at Hamburg and Bremen and the factories at Detroit and Pittsburgh had something to do with it; but at any rate it moved, and left to bewilderment and confusion the class that had ruled it. For the class was unable to adjust itself.

To a world which has watched the activities of that class with admiration, exasperation and sympathy, by turns, Mr. Galsworthy's novels are a priceless possession.

THE BLEATING DEMAGOGUE

Governmental economy is a great thing, but it does provide a field day for the demagogue now and then.

When Congress was discussing appropriations for the White House not long ago, one member arose and beat his breast because $50,000 was included to equip a swimming pool for the use of President-elect Roosevelt. He pointed out that there are many citizens in the land who do not have private swimming pools, and he wondered if the country could afford the expense. And yet, when it was suggested that he offer an amendment to strike out the $50,000, he became strangely silent.

To point out that the president of the United States is entitled to one or two little things that the rest of us lack, that $50,000 is only a drop in the bucket as far as federal expenditures go and that special factors make a swimming pool almost a necessity in Mr. Roosevelt's case, would be beside the point. This congressman got a chance to bleat about "the peepul"; and that, apparently, was all he wanted.

President Hoover exposes the fallacy of some of the savings made by the House of Representatives in current appropriation bills. The totals represent a generous slicing down, but examination of the items shows that the next session—after the valiant congressmen have proclaimed their vast savings to their constituencies—will have to make up with deficiency appropriations certain stated expenses not provided for. Perhaps this might be called a new kind of political economy.

Over in Scotland times are as tough or tougher than they are here in the United States. "Hold on a minute," called the Scotchman, was walking the bank of a river when he heard a man shouting for help. The man was in the river and he could not swim.

"Help, help, I can't swim," the Scotchman in the river yelled. "Hold on a minute," called the man on the bank. "What's your name and where do you work?" "My name's John MacGregor and I work at the Glenlyon Machine Works," gurgled the man just as he came up after going down the second time. "But help me, help me, I can't swim!"

"Neither can I," shouted back the man on the bank. And then he started running and he didn't stop until he arrived at the Glenlyon Machine Works. "My name is Timothy McTavish," he said to the employment manager.

"and I want to apply for John MacGregor's job. I just saw him drowning in the river." "Hard luck, old man," was the reply. "His job was taken ten minutes ago by the man who pushed him in."

The train suddenly came to a grinding stop. "What has happened, conductor?" asked a nervous old lady. "Nothing much, we just ran over a cask," he replied. "Was it on the track?" she asked. "No," he replied, "we chased it into a barn."

The unusual timely screen drama "Afraid to Talk," showing at the Yuca, is laid in a great American city. It is a story of a young man and his wife. He is married. He is young, hopeful, full of the joy of life and planning ahead for his young and too pretty wife. Suddenly he is clutched in the coils of a system that is the despair of most great cities. He is innocent, but he is a midge cut by the thing that has him in its grasp.

But the power of his captor lies in the power to make men silent. They are all afraid to talk. Suddenly this badged and beater bill boy finds his tongue. With his wife a prey to untold dangers, he arises to tremendous heights of heroism and fighting back with the only weapon at his command in a drama of remarkable intensity.

"Afraid to Talk," adapted from the play of the same name, features a cast of talented dramatic screen actors, assembled with meticulous care by Director Edward Cahn in order to give the play the most authentic characterization. Eric Linden, Sidney Fox, Tully Marshall, Louise Calhern, Mayo Methot, Bertone Churchill, Edward Arrigo and a long list of film artists head the players in the Mal-Sklar dramatic indictment of the metropolitan political "racket."

Women Widen Legal Field

SAN FRANCISCO. (UP).—Legal fields for women are widening. Judge Genevieve Cline, only woman federal judge in the United States, believes. She is in San Francisco on circuit. "The law is a jealous mistress," Judge Cline said, "but there is no reason why a woman cannot succeed in the legal profession as well as a man. The law is difficult. It needs one's whole allegiance. But a woman can make a success of it and opportunities for women in the law constantly are growing."

She pointed out that a woman, who contemplates the legal profession, must choose between that profession as a career, and marriage, as a career. "This is not a matter of gender," she said. "It would be as difficult for a man to keep a house and raise children and carry on a legal career as for a woman."

One of the delights of the profession, Judge Cline declared, is that one can continue studying law and practicing it all one's life. Judge Cline will preside over some 3,000 customs cases during her assignment here. She practiced law with her brother, Judge John A. Cline, of Cleveland, until 1922, when President Harding appointed her U. S. Customs Appraiser for Ohio.

In 1928, President Coolidge appointed her first woman judge of the U. S. Customs Court, succeeding Judge William C. Adamson.

The net cost of the World war to the United States was $27,600,000 per day, including loans to the Allies, the sum rises to $38,500,000 daily.

"Dinner at Eight" Reviewed for Club

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following review of the popular play "Dinner at Eight" in substance represents interpolated remarks of Miss Stella Maye Lanham, who read a "cut" version of the play to the Play Readers club last week. It is published because of the interest attaching to the play, now continuing a run on Broadway, and because of the well summed up criticism presented.

The combination of Edna Ferber and George Kaufman has long been one of the drama's fortunate collaborations. Together, they have created, in Dinner at Eight, presented by Sam Harts at the Music Box, a lustrous theatre exhibit. It may not possess the exuberant comedy touch that made The Royal Family such a joy, but it has a biting ironic humor that reveals the authors at their best. They have chosen to observe, and what Mr. Kaufman and Miss Ferber miss deserves no comment. Although their point of view is hardly more than one of wise penetration of surfaces they have done a more than competent job of unmasking the shallow lives of a group of fashionable New Yorkers. In the mechanism for hanging their disjointed observations on a coordinating framework their play suggests Grand Hotel. In Vicki Baum's play the underlying unity was one of place, but in Dinner at Eight, it was a single event, a dinner party, to which Mrs. Jordan had invited her ill-assorted guests.

Mrs. Oliver Jordan, a shallow, self-centered, anxious to impress herself a good turn, plans to entertain for a pair of British pilgrims, Lord and Lady Ferricelli whom she had met on the Riviera. She calls by telephone the ill-starred group who will grace her dinner-party the following Friday at eight. In the week intervening between the time of Mrs. Jordan's loose telephonic invitations and the passing of cocktails before the anticipated dinner, Mr. Kaufman and Miss Ferber review the melodramatic events which involve the host and her guests.

Everyone in the large cast has been well chosen, according to reviews. Ann Andrews as the shallow, fashionable hostess; Constance Collier as the ex-favorite of the stage; Malcolm Duncan as the unfortunates; and Marguerite Churchill as his daughter Paula, and the rest. To daughter Paula, as the cast-off movie favorite, credit must go for the most vivid performance in an evening of brilliant portraiture. Returning to the stage after an absence of twelve years, she spent largely in Hollywood, she played with grandeur and effect, bringing reality to an unsympathetic and artificial part.

Canada Revises Its Prison Laws

OTTAWA, Ont. (UP).—Investigation after a series of riots in Canadian penitentiaries, resulted in a probe into living conditions in Canadian penal institutions.

As a result, the Department of Justice has made a series of changes in prison rules. They are as follows:

One. The silence rule is to be amended and well behaved convicts may be permitted to talk to each other in a normal conversational tone during prescribed periods.

Two. Electric lights in cells and dormitories to be increased to not less than 25 watts in cells and 60 watts in dormitories to permit reading without undue eye strain.

Three. The present regulation regarding dropping of hair or shaving the head is to be repealed and convicts will be permitted what is known as a military or short hair cut. Any convict who has made an escape or has attempted to escape shall be required to have his head closely cropped.

Four. Convicts, who use tobacco, shall be given an allowance of one-eleventh of a pound per week and the convict shall have the choice of pipe tobacco or five cut tobacco for cigars and cigarette papers will be supplied. The convict who uses chewing tobacco shall be allowed one eleventh of a pound every two weeks and smoking tobacco every two weeks.

Cave Reveals Ancient City

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (UP).—Evidence of an Indian city, having an estimated population of several hundred thousands, has been discovered near here by Rev. S. J. Newberry, an archaeologist.

Rev. Newberry found traces of the city while exploring a cave in which were a group of ancient stone idols.

In the opinion of the archaeologist, the city definitely is connected with the cave, as he found blocks of stone of the same shell formation as that of which the idols were formed.

The stone is native to this region. The blocks found were about 12 by 14 inches in size, and easily could have been carried by a man.

Rev. Newberry estimated the number of mounds at about 1,000. He opened none on his first expedition trip, and was unable to state the percentage which were burial mounds and those which were formed by the crumbling of the adobe lodges, which he believes formed the principal structures of the city.

The city is about four miles long and a half mile wide, with the mounds placed closely together. The mounds are about 50 feet in diameter and four feet high.

REDISTRICTING PLAN WOULD BE A GREAT CHANGE

By W. WINSTON COPELAND, United Press Staff Correspondent. AUSTIN. (UP)—Either the district number or the constituency of the district would be changed in virtually every state senatorial district if a redistricting bill introduced by Sen. Archer Parr of Benavides is passed.

In Sadler Company

A. C. HEFFNER, former leading man now playing feature character comedy parts with Harley Sadler and his new company, which is appearing at the Ritz Theatre for one week beginning Sunday, Heffer and Miss Ethel Snow are the only members of the new cast that have not appeared in Midland before.

Sadler's Popularity Has Many Causes

To say that Harley Sadler and his company which is appearing at the Ritz Theatre for one week, beginning Sunday, February 12th, are popular in West Texas would only be telling you something that you already know, but the why of that popularity is something that everyone should know.

Jones' Life Read Like Story Book

EDITORS NOTE: The following items were written by O. P. Jones, Midland and Amarillo cattleman who died Friday at the home of a niece at Alvin, Texas. Jones was widely known throughout West Texas. "The New Encyclopedia of Texas" says of him: "Oscar P. Jones is one of the outstanding men of the ranching industry of the Panhandle. He is of the old school, and to such as he the Panhandle owes its present-day development."
