Unfairness vs. Unfairness
Sales Tax Not New
Adding to the Burden
Self-Interest Foremost

By Duard E. Scott

EDITOR'S NOTE: Views expressed daily in this column are those of the writers, and do not necessarily reflect the editorial policy of The Reporter-Telegram.

Without attempting to impugn the motives and sincerity of school boards of this section, who last week endorsed the sales tax, many will wonder how they could have the guts to support it in the face of a stricken people pleading relief from excessive taxes. They hold the property tax an unfair tax, that it does not place the load equally upon the able to pay, and they want to equalize the burden by making it heavy on everybody. They want to release the people from payment of a tax which will not in the future amount to over $18,000,000 a year, and slap on another tax that will yield $45,000,000 a year and up. They want to abolish the state ad valorem tax which is unfair to some, and replace it with a sales tax so heavy it is unfair to everybody.

No amount of dexterous handling of such expressions as "tangible property" and "intangible property" can alter the fact that it will cost the taxpayer two and a half times as much to put $45,000,000 into the state treasury as to put $18,000,000 there. And any plan requiring the public to dig deeper into its pocket is untimely, to say the least.

Furthermore, the theory that the ad valorem tax in Texas is excessively unequal can hardly be supported since the addition of this tax on homesteads assessed at $3,000 and under. No one able to pay has ever been hurt by the property tax except the small farmer, and the small home-owner. All others have the opportunity to pass on the tax, and have been doing so all along. Taxes have become a part of overhead in business and are passed on to the consumer, a form of sales tax we have had for a long time. And if a man has a home that is assessed for more than $3,000, the tax is manifestly bigger than the man. At the present time there is not enough inequality in the property tax to get excited about.

The objections of informed people to the sales tax as now before the state legislature is not so much the abolition of the ad valorem tax system as it is protest against higher taxes. No matter how many figures they are shown, and regardless of the slick arguments that are being advanced, they are not convinced that you cannot lower taxes by raising them. They know that some people pay more taxes than others, and that some people have more to eat than others. They are those who are not fooled by prejudicial talk. They have a thinking apparatus of their own and use it. They know they are already paying what might as well be called a sales tax, every time they buy a loaf of bread from a tax-paying grocer, or a shirt from a tax-paying clothier. They know, likewise, that it averages a great deal less than 3%.

There would be far less objection, and much more good sense, in a sales tax at the rate of 1 or 1 1/2%. On the basis of reasonable figures this would produce much more revenue as the present ad valorem tax, if we are determined that the ad valorem tax must go. Even with that, there should be a constitutional limit of not over 2% to provide a curb on free-hearted legislators. The possibilities of the sales tax are great, and the temptation to exploit it should not be placed before our lawmakers who, in the past, have shown themselves to be very weak-willed in money matters.

Another point for the taxpayer to consider is that abolition of the state ad valorem tax still leaves county, city and school taxes to pay. For example, Midland taxpayers in 1932 were assessed at the rate of $4.79 per $100 valuation. If there were no state ad valorem tax to pay, they would still have $4.10 to pay on county, city, and school assessments. If you add to this a 3% sales tax, you still have a tidy tax bill.

Probably 80 per cent of all ad valorem taxpayers will pay their last such tax bill this year anyway. What have they to gain by its complete abolition? Most of the remaining 20 per cent are business men and large property owners who have always passed their tax bills on to consumers, so they have little to gain. But all would have plenty to lose through a high-rate sales tax.

Self-interest alone, and not consideration for down-trodden taxpayers, appears to be behind the school board's approval of this proposed increase in taxes. They expect to get a large slice of the new revenue for the schools, as evidenced by their petition to representatives which suggests that state per capita apportionment be increased to $25.

School men, on the whole, are admirably sincere and labor unceasingly for the interests of their institutions, but it is time they and others learn the public purse has a bottom. Money serves a very useful purpose in the education of children but to get full benefit of it, these same children should be well fed and clothed. Too many parents are (See IN BAS RELIEF, page 4)

CHURCH LAYMEN HOLD MEETING AND ORGANIZE

Laymen of Midland organized an association Sunday to carry on lay church services in Midland and in the communities of the county. The organization was formed at the Methodist church on call of Barney G. Grafa, author of the local idea, and W. I. Pratt.

Representatives from the Christian Baptist, Presbyterian, Church of Christ and Methodist churches were present. It is the plan of the body to divide into groups, and these groups will be called on at various times to go to the various communities to conduct Sunday afternoon services.

The laymen will likely conduct occasional church services in Midland as well as going to the various nearby communities. Pastors of the churches present gave hearty approval of the movement. The executive committee will meet tonight at Pratt's home to perfect plans.

The men present Sunday were merely the nucleus to organize. Every layman in Midland is not only eligible but warmly desired to join the movement, and every layman who will assist is asked to notify the secretary or president.

Seemingly it is a heartless father who would attempt with a bow and arrow to shoot an apple from the head of his own daughter, but Clarence Hickman is shown just about to perform the experiment with Mary Lee Hickman at the science convention in Atlantic City and there wasn't a bit of danger. It appeared to the crowd that he made a perfect shot but he explained that it was all a scientific illusion.

HIGHER INCOME TAX RATE CAUSES PAYERS LOOK FOR ALL POSSIBLE DEDUCTIONS

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION THROUGH ODESSA IS HELD UP TEMPORARILY

Temporary restraining order against the Texas highway commission's procedure towards construction along the redesignated route of State Highway 1, Federal Highway 80 through the corporate limits of Odessa was granted by District Judge Charles L. Klapproth in district court this morning following a hearing on the first amended petition of Plaintiffs George Elliott, R. T. Reid, D. L. Griffin and T. S. Armstrong, residents of Odessa. Judge Klapproth did not accede to the prayer of J. M. Caldwell, attorney for plaintiffs, that the commissioners court of Ector county, as agents of the highway commission, will restrain the restrained parties; nor did he allow construction restraint on those parts of the disputed segment that lie outside the corporate limits of Odessa to be included in the order from the Andy Newman place to the east limits, and from the proposed underpass west to the western limits.

Collision Adds to Hunter's Bad Luck

Culminating a wolf hunt in which the wolf got away, W. S. Crook, manager of Wm. Cannon company, had a continuation of bad luck late Sunday when his automobile collided with that of Jim Adams, badly damaging both machines and bringing the occupants to a halt.

The collision occurred at Terrell and Main, on the south side, as Crook and a party were returning from a wolf hunt at the L. C. Proctor ranch. Crook and John Bailey were thrown from Crook's car and Adams suffered shoulder and back injuries.

The wolf which was being hunted at the Proctor ranch had been killed sheep. Four men on horseback sought to bring the animal into the open where several other hunters in automobiles planned to run him down. Frank Boyd sighted the wolf but lost his trail as the sheep killer escaped into another pasture.

PEACOCKS AND PRINCES

Of the constant conflicts in the masculine breast arises from the inner urge to array himself as the peacock and his pusillanimous awe of the grins of his fellow men. Now comes a stout-hearted Englishman wearing together with the courage of his predilections, a yellow waistcoat and a dress coat with red and blue labels. Moreover, with a gallantry almost meriting the D. S. O. he actually presided, garbed in these rainbow hues at a sedate Royal Society dinner.

"What the world lacks today is color," declared Prof. Henry Edward Armstrong, for the defier of tradition was none other than the distinguished British authority on chemical matters. He told his hearers:

"This is a drag age in which we live. . . . A hundred years or so ago the finest kind of Englishmen dressed in pearl pink trousers and a salmon-pink blouse—but look at us now!"

In the presence of such eloquence the staid members and fellows of the Royal Society probably did regard one another rather furtively and find the picture a bit odd, don't you know.

This love of color may be a dangerous thing. It brought jeers in the House of Commons to young Disraeli. The future Prime Minister, in the days when he was known rather as the author of "Vivian Grey" than as a budding statesman, had an Oriental taste in costume.

Professor Armstrong confesses to his inability to convert the Prince of Wales to sartorial shades, although he once attired himself in a bright green waistcoat when he knew he was going to sit opposite that royal arbiter of fashion at a public dinner. Beau Brummell was more fortunate—or more audacious. When George IV was Regent, he rarely chose a garment or a lace ruffle without consulting the autocratic dandy of Bath as to color or length.

There remains, however, hope. Professor Armstrong should visit the campus of an American college and blink before the dazzling brilliance of fraternity cravats and blazers of weird and many colors.

HUEY'S FILIBUSTER

Old timers in the Senate looked on with something akin to amazement while Huey Long of Louisiana went about the task of filibustering against the Glass banking bill.

And the thing that seemed to astonish them most was the way the "kingfish" maneuvered and manipulated the rules of the Senate to his advantage.

Senate rules are tricky. Often a senator supposed to have a wide knowledge of them finds himself helpless when a colleague more skillful or observant springs one on him. More than one senator has found the floor taken from him in this manner.

And the fact that Long, a comparatively newcomer to the Senate, has so grounded himself in the knowledge of them that he was able to filibuster to his heart's content while senators with years of experience were trying to pick him off was regarded as little short of remarkable.

Almost every known method of hazing a senator was tried out on the irrepressible Louisianan during his filibuster. But he refused to be hazed.

A good example of how well he has mastered the rules of the Senate came on the second day of his filibuster. He almost tied himself up, but managed to wiggle out.

It came when he demanded that the Senate take up the regular order of business, hoping that he could force a return to consideration of a deficiency appropriation bill which had displaced temporarily the Glass banking bill. It looked as if he had slipped up.

His demand brought back before the Senate the Glass bill, just what he didn't want. He rallied quickly, however, and managed to hold the floor by devious ways all afternoon.

There hasn't been a filibuster in the Senate for a long time when it was so evident that the filibusterer was having such a good time.

And Glass himself stayed around all the time. Once Huey missed him.

"Where is Senator Glass?" he bellowed. Immediately the door to the cloakroom opened. "Here he is," replied Glass, "listening."

OUR JOBLESS MILLIONS

The estimate that there are now fully 11,500,000 jobless workers in the United States, made recently by President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, is a point to bear in mind while Congress discusses proposals to appropriate vast sums for direct federal unemployment relief.

"Those out of work are in greater need now than ever before, for after three years of depression their resources are exhausted," Mr. Green points out. "Mental and physical wreckage caused by depression is driving families to seek relief in constantly growing numbers. Relief need is increasing much faster than unemployment."

All of this is too obvious to need argument. The situation is profoundly serious, and its seriousness must be one of the determining factors in any debate on the new unemployment relief proposals.

EDITORIAL NOTES

London sees the Postmaster-General appoint three women prominent in politics on an honorary advisory committee whose business it is to foster more perfect relations between the post office and the public. Perhaps three-letter postage might gain popularity in the United States if there were charming and tactful feminine committees to "sell" the citizens on its necessity.

The Pullman Company announces that during 1932 its sleeping cars carried more than 15,000,000 patrons 7,000,000,000 passenger miles without a single irretrievable mishap. In a time of assorted savings and boasted budgets the company might even have added that on the long ride it tucked away the big crowd to sweet dreams with an absolute minimum of waste space.

The Town Quack

(Reserves the right to "quack" about everything without taking a stand on anything.)

Here's a little poem somebody mailed the editor and he gave it to me, entitled the "Joy Spreading Circle":

The farmer sells a load of wheat and all the world grow fair and sweet; He starts off humming cheerful tunes and pays the grocer for his prunes; The grocer, who has had the blues, now buys his wife and children shoes; That ten the shoeman thinks God sent, and runs and pays it on his rent;

Next day the landlord hands the bill Dr. Bates for his pill; The happy doctor tells his frau, that business is improving now; And adds: "My dear, you need a new suit; you'd better take a trip out West."

So in a week or so, the wife is on the farm enjoying life. She pays her board to Farmer Howe who takes the ten and says "I swear! Here's something that just can't be beat! This bill's the one I got for wheat."

With it he buys more prunes, and then it starts a-going around again.

When Harry Lauder made an appearance in a certain Texas town a few years ago he was called upon by a substantial and leading citizen at Lauder's hotel. They talked for some time and when the citizen started to leave he asked Lauder if he had a couple of extra "comp" tickets.

"I'm sure glad to meet another Scotchman," said Lauder, laughing. "I have no more passes, but if you'll come around to the stage door after the performance I'll tell you about it."

TO TELL you that Chesterfield is the only good cigarette . . . that the makers of Chesterfield Cigarettes are the only ones who can buy good tobaccos and manufacture cigarettes scientifically . . . would be nothing short of foolish.

For all tobacco is sold in open auctions—where anyone can buy if he will pay the price. Even the machines on which different cigarettes are made are alike.

This much, however, is true: By using the right kinds of Turkish and Domestic tobaccos in just the right proportions . . . by blending and cross-blending them together in the most careful way . . . we make Chesterfield what smokers say it is . . . a cigarette that's milder, that tastes better. Just try them.

"MAN against WOMAN" Novelization by Arrangement with Columbia Pictures

WHAT HAS HAPPENED Johnny McCould, crack detective of the New York police force, arrests George Perry, an employee of a firm that has been robbed, on mere suspicion. Lola Parker, who loves Perry, and who is in turn loved by Johnny...

McCloud made a pathetic attempt to explain "Don't you see, Happy?—If I get her, I get Perry." O'Neil was explosive in his expressiveness. "My big brown eye! You don't want Perry—that's only a stall. You want her!"

The truck in pursuit of the taxicab rushed madly on, scattering its cases of silk along the way as it careened down the street and finally crashed into a religious goods store window.

Cloud was also in for a struggle, as the result of his crash. He was not dangerously hurt however, while there was no hope for O'Neil, who died calling for McCould and telling him it was okay.

Christie assigned McCould to work with O'Neil on silk loft burglaries and the two left to go down and look over the warehouses. McCould was thoughtful, hardly aware of the presence of O'Neil at his side.

"I want to get you some paper and a pair of scissors. You might as well start cutting them paper dolls right now. All kiddin' aside, you better put the brakes on before you crash. You're too good a cop to get led off your beat by a little thing."

"You lied to me," Lola mused dully. "No, I didn't. I just didn't want you to worry. That's all I ever think about—you. And if this place is getting on your nerves, we'll go away."

The opinion of those favoring the law is that the constitution of the United States in specific terms granted to congress the full and unrestricted right to regulate commerce between the states and with foreign nations and that therefore congress has the right to determine what shall and what shall not enter that commerce, and particularly that it is the province of the legislative branch of the government rather than the judiciary to determine matters of political and economic policy. They further base their contention of the legality of the proposed law on the fact that the inability of industry to absorb the millions of unemployed under the existing conditions of the work week has developed a condition dangerous to the stability of the government itself. They point out that there is danger that the situation may become so critical that the future existence of the supreme court itself may be imperiled.

The hearings before the committee were continued today and among the witnesses were Phillip Murray, vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, and Thomas McMahon, president of the Textile Workers of America, and representatives of other large associations.

All of them presented their case with clearness and vigor and in every case supplemented their statements with government records on the number of men employed, the hours of labor, the percentage of labor displaced by technological improvements since 1900, production per man then as compared with the year 1932.

Phillip Murray, of the United Mine Workers, made an exceedingly able presentation of conditions in that mining industry, that he pointed out that $10,000 coal mines are without employment and that those still employed average only 130 days a year. Due to the introduction of machinery, production has increased more than twice as many tons per day as formerly.

Mr. McMahon demonstrated by government statistics that in cotton and crease in textile production per man has increased 900 per cent. He showed that there are thirty-two million spindles in the United States and that at the present time required in domestic and foreign trade, even in normal times, could be produced by the present workers.

Hilarity Provided In Yucca's Comedy

"They Just Had to Get Married," the Universal comedy which opened an engagement at the Yucca theatre, is what is commonly known as a riot. It is one of the funniest pictures of the season, and caused audiences last night to shriek with laughter. This picture serves to bring together again as stars of the picture that clever comedy pair—Slim Summerville and ZaSu Pitts. Summerville's awkwardness is a perfect foil for Miss Pitts' lackadaisical nervousness, and as man and wife they are the center of a swift succession of hilarious situations. Miss Pitts has never before been given such an opportunity for the display of her pantomime talents.

Their supporting cast in "They Just Had to Get Married" is excellent, including as it does such accomplished players as Roland Young, Cliff D'Orsay, Vera Tessdale, Aubrey Smith and many others, who make up a company which is well-nigh perfectly cast.

Universal is to be congratulated on the making of this sparkling comedy, and Director Edward Ludwig for so handling the filming as to make the picture highly entertaining.

Evil miss "They Just Had to Get Married." It is a comedy gem.

A representative of a national farmers' union also appeared as a witness and stated that the farmers realized that they had no chance for a market for their products unless labor was employed at a remunerative wage and that therefore the farmers union of which he is president heartily endorsed this bill.

An incident of dramatic human interest occurred when Mr. Murray had finished his presentation of the case of the coal miners. He is a distinguished looking gentleman, perhaps 47 years old. The committee, the newspapermen and everyone present were impressed by the ability, dignity and clearness of diction with which he marshalled his facts and arguments.

He was deeply impressed by these facts the chairman, Senator Norris, enthusiastically asked him to answer, for the purpose of incorporation in the record, some personal questions. He asked if it was true that every national officer of the United Mine Workers of America had begun as an actual miner. The reply was yes. Asked when he began working in mines and where and how long he had worked in them, he replied that he began at ten years of age in Scotland and worked in the mines there until he was 16 years old, when he migrated to America and went to work in the Pittsburgh district mines; that he had passed the sixth grade at ten years of age and that, out of economic necessity, his father obtained the necessary certificate, and placed him in the mine. He stated that he had attended no schools since that time but that for the past 12 years he has been a member of the board of education of the city where he lives.

Pirate Built This Church

Church of Our Lady the Queen of the Angels... Los Angeles' oldest house of worship.

By ERSKINE JOHNSON NEA Service Writer
LOS ANGELES—Built in 1814 by a "reformed" pirate, who sold wine and brandy to raise the necessary funds, Los Angeles' first church—Church of Our Lady the Queen of the Angels—still stands and, despite its age, is used regularly. Only members of the Mexican population here, however, attend church there now, but time was when Los Angeles' leading citizens worshipped in its small chapel. That was long ago, when proud Spanish families lived on great ranchos here. The pirate who "reformed" and built the church was Joseph Chapman, a Yankee shipbuilder and first of the English tongue to locate in California. He was captured by the Spanish when his ship stopped here and members of his crew raided a rancho.

Placed on probation by his Spanish captors, Chapman became a good Californian and later was taken in as a son-in-law by one of its Spanish families. In addition to creating the city's first church, he built the first water-run grist mill in California.

The cornerstone of the church was laid in 1814 by Padre Gil of Mission San Gabriel. Chapman, aided by Indians from nearby missions who were paid 12 1/2 cents a day, soon completed the building. Their handwork was so good, that the church appears today almost as it did 118 years ago.

During its construction, financial difficulties were encountered, but Chapman quickly solved the problem. He had padres from nearby missions contribute wine and brandy, which was sold to the populace to raise the necessary funds. Cattle, also, were given by the padres and sold by Chapman to raise money.

FARMER BUYING POWER NEEDED FOR RECOVERY
By W. B. STOREY (President Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway)

CHICAGO. (UP)—As to general business conditions, the outlook for 1933 is somewhat problematical. The various difficulties which have beset business seem to be working out one by one. We hope particularly for an improvement in commodity prices, especially farm products, far apart from the importance of this to Santa Fe territory, nothing will furnish a better general basis for a return of prosperity than increased buying power among our farmers.

Winter wheat is in good condition, except in the dry area, and citrus fruit crops are doing well, but nothing definite can be predicted so far in advance regarding next year's harvest.

The railroad situation is clouded both by the general business depression and because no step has been taken to regulate competitive carriers, while our hands are tied. Let the quicker will be the recovery.

BUSINESS NOW GOOD CONTRAST WITH YEAR AGO

By A. W. ROBERTSON (Chairman, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.)
EAST PITTSBURGH, Pa. (UP)—The contrast between this time and a year ago is marked. A year ago business was running downhill with the brakes off. Now we are no longer going downhill and in some quarters business has improved substantially, although the general standard of business throughout the country is still very low.

The future is uncertain and vague in detail, but we can see enough to know that 1933 will be a year of gradually improving business. The most hopeful sign is the improved point of view of industrial leaders. The discouraged have passed out of the picture and men of courage and youth are in command.

The restoration of our factories, commercial buildings, institutions and homes to anything like first class condition after three years of depression will in itself provide the stimulus we need. Industrial leaders are beginning to recognize this and are planning programs of rehabilitation and modernization on the basis of insuring future earnings.

Storekeepers, landlords and home owners are bound to take part in this movement in their own self-interest, and when the snowball gets to rolling it will assume mountainous proportions.

I expect to see a material improvement in business in the next 12 months. This is based on the assumption that our next president will surround himself with wise counselors and the matter of international debts and tariffs will be settled with reasonable dispatch and good sense. We have a right to expect these results from our statesmen and business men.

French Discuss Old Sea Canal

PARIS. (UP)—A project first visualized by the Roman conquerors of Gaul is being advocated in modern France for the triple purpose of relieving unemployment, giving the nation a new incentive and aiding trade.

The project is the so-called "Canal of the Two Seas," which would link the Atlantic and Mediterranean, relieving Orient-bound steamers of the necessity of circumnavigating the Iberian peninsula.

The scheme was revived in the Fifteenth century by one Pierre-Paul de Riquet, descendant of the famous Arnieghis, who left their stamp of architecture and engineering on Florence. Encouraged by the Minister Colbert, he started work on a canal from Bordeaux to Marseilles in 1666, utilizing the Garonne river on the west coast, which was completed in 1681, six months after he had died.

This channel, which still exists, was made only for small vessels and is navigated at present chiefly by barges. The project advocated now is to enlarge the canal so as to permit the passage of freighters and even liners.

Somewhere In The Shopping Center:
One purseful of opportunites..
THE opportunities, to which we refer, are the daily bargains to be found in every shopping area. Some people find them quite by chance... stumble over them blindly... and acquire them with astonishment.
Others never seem to be in the right store at the right time: If there's a 25% marked-down sale of shoes at Smith's they are buying at Brown & Co... If a grocer three blocks away is clearing out his canned goods at half-price, they are at the corner store making routine purchases.
But—there are some people who always find these opportunities. Their money buys them more—and better—merchandise than their neighbors'. Why? Not through good luck, you may be sure; but simply because these people read the advertisements in their daily newspapers.
This advertising is NEWS. It tells WHAT... It shows WHERE. Those who read it every day are informed. They save themselves time, trouble, and DOLLARS... And their homes are always up-to-date, their clothes stylish... their meals fresh with seasonal variety... all through the opportunities that advertising gives them.
