Chinese Sortie Blocks Temporary Japanese Jehol Raid

A STRATEGIC BRIDGE TORN IN BIG BLAST

Money Masters to Guide Britain's Debt Envoys

Immediate Consideration Blocked by Clause

LONDON—Before a British government delegation sets sail for America to discuss the war debts problem with President Roosevelt, the members will consult, not only with Montagu Norman, Governor of the Bank of England, but also with the money masters of the tight little island.

There is nothing in the United States, not even in the federal reserve bank and its branches, even approaching to the "Big Five." They cover England and Wales like a glove. Some even extend their operations into Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Perhaps the most remarkable of the five money masters, whom the government delegation will consult, is Reginald McKenna, chairman of the Midland bank. He is 70, practiced at the bar, became one of the leading politicians of the liberal party and successively held the cabinet posts of president of the board of education, first lord of the admiralty, home secretary and finally, chancellor of the exchequer during the crucial war years of 1915-16.

The Hon. Rupert E. Beckett, head of the Westminster bank is 63. His business activities are manifold. Among other things he is head of the company which publishes one of the greatest papers in northern England, the Yorkshire Post. He is also one of the directors of the big London and Northwestern railway system.

Frederick C. Goodenough, chairman of Barclays bank, is 67, was born in India, educated in Zurich university and went at once into the banking business, where he went steadily to the top.

John William Pease, chairman of the Lloyds bank, is 64. After graduating from Oxford university, he went into the office of a big bank in Northumberland. When this was amalgamated with Lloyds, he became a director of the latter and has now for a good many years been the head of the big concern.

OLD AGE IS WHAT WE MAKE IT

Human beings have many fears. None of them is more tragic or foolish than the fear of old age.

There died in New York not long ago a veteran actress at the age of 80. Few people knew her real age, before her death; some thought she was 65, some thought she was much younger. She had a grown daughter, but she never let anyone know it; she had left her husband and her daughter, not long ago, in order that no one might find out how old she was.

Several years before her death she had had to retire from the stage; but she tried to keep up the fiction of youth to the very last. She passed herself off as "the pretty young ingenue." After her retirement she became even more determined to be youthful. She even convinced herself. In her last years she was not an old woman, in her own eyes; she was a charming young actress, flushed with triumphs, ready to rise to stardom anew on her girlish beauty and charm.

Her story is almost unbearably pathetic. But it is unusual only in that this woman went a little bit farther in her fear of old age than most of us try to go.

We all share her fear, to a certain extent. We fight the advancing years desperately and futilely, and when wrinkles or gray hairs or bodily weakness at last convince us that we are on the downward slope we feel very sorry for ourselves, and contend that life has played us a scurvy trick.

And there is in all of this a subtle proof that our scheme of living is out of joint somewhere. Old age should be the crown of life—the Indian summer of human existence, a time for peaceful contemplation and reflection. It might be, if we prepared for it.

But we don't. We force ourselves not to think that we shall be old some day; and when that some day comes, and we are old, we feel that fate has cheated us most infamously.

It needn't be that way. We all know old people who have escaped that mistake; people who accept age undisturbed, who don't grope back in vain for the illusion of lost youth, but who accept the quiet and peace of advanced years as a harbor for which they have long been steering.

AN IRONIC REPRIMAND

New York policemen swooped down on a subway arcade entrance to a store building the other night and arrested 106 jobless men, some of them lame, some of them very old, a few of them blind, who had been making a practice of sleeping there on cold nights.

The vagrant 106 were hauled into court, and the account of their arrest says that "after warning them against future similar offenses, the magistrate suspended sentence in each case."

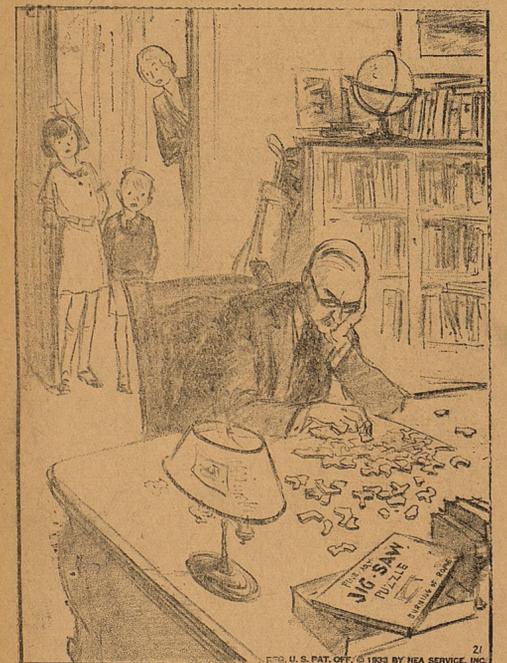

And the story added that "most of the group, according to the police, were of types seldom found in similar round-ups made in times of ordinary prosperity. Many were destitute 'white collar' workers and mechanics."

There is something deftly ironic in the thought of these jobless and homeless men being solemnly warned not to repeat their offense. One trusts that the court made it possible for them to obey its order by seeing to it that some sort of place was provided where they could sleep.

Unmist said: A baby is born. In eight or nine months it begins to walk toward the grave. All paths, all highways, all lanes lead toward the grave.

I won't use any more of his copy.

Well, it's up to the states now to ratify or turn down the resolution repealing the eighteenth amendment. The senate and the house made short work of submitting it to the states. I believe, like Mr. Hogan said in his article yesterday, that the passage of the repeal resolution was mostly to show the people that congress has done something. But it places the responsibility back on us. We are going to have to organize for constitutional conventions. There will be fights to seat the wets or the dries. The conventions will be railroaded, steam rolled, bull dozed and manhandled by whatever side gets the best and quickest hold. All that has to be gone through in each state. The real fight for or against prohibition has just begun. Better get your mind made up and start to work, because when this job is over it will be too late to wish you had done something.

New Bullets Pierce Tanks

JUNCTION CITY, Kan. (UP)—Tests conducted by the department of weapons at Fort Riley convinced officers that ammunition now developed will pierce and probably disable any armored tank in existence.

The tests were of great military value. It was believed because of the important part tanks played in the World war.

A 50-caliber machine gun with armor-piercing ammunition was used against a Renault tank of the same type as those used in the World war.

A total of 254 rounds of projectiles of which 192 rounds were armor-piercing, were fired at the tank which crossed a field between 300 and 600 yards from the guns.

The tank was disabled and the armor-piercing ammunition used was not the highest velocity obtainable.

Officers said after the test that the new weapons and ammunition would annihilate tanks equipped with any armor plate yet developed.

20% of Merchant Fleet Is Laid Up

NEW ORLEANS, (UP)—Twenty per cent of the world merchant fleet is now laid up as the result of de-commissioning during 1932, according to H. Gerrish Smith, president of the National Council of American Shipbuilders.

The best chance of more activity is the fact that much of American shipping is 20 years old and must soon be replaced, Smith stated, but added that the outlook for new vessel contracts is very poor.

No new contracts were placed last year for merchant ships while a contract for a 10,000-ton cruiser was the only large job from the navy.

Fourteen vessels were completed, Smith said. There are now only about 10,000 employed on ship construction in seaboard shipyards, a drop of 40 per cent from the number at work January 1, last year.

Gibson Girl on Way Back Again

NEW YORK. (UP)—Feminine curves and gayly flowered bonnets soon are to be with us again. The Gibson Girl is coming back, according to fashion authorities, and styles which flourished in the late nineties shortly will be seen in midday's new spring wardrobe.

"The Gibson Girl of 1933," a modish young woman, who borrows from the past to enhance a thoroughly modern costume, was presented in a fashion show recently, which stressed hats as the salient point of the revival. The brimmed hat and curves of the nineties were modernized, and models featured Gibson Girl costumes, compared with their 1933 versions.

The Gibson Girl originally was made popular through the drawings of Charles Dana Gibson. Every week, he drew for "Life" one of these slim lovely creatures, sporting a waistline almost too good to be true. The Gibson Girl became nationally famous. Songs were written about her. Her clothes and styles were copied. The wife of Charles Dana Gibson, one of the three beautiful Langhorne sisters of Virginia, was known as the ideal Gibson girl, as was her sister, the present Lady Nancy Astor.

Styles go in in cycles, and the Gibson Girl, according to Earl M. Farrington, Millinery Quality Guild chairman, is a type that must appeal to women, tired of the ultra-simple modes of the last years, so she is coming back modernized.

Royalty Has a Quiet Evening

LONDON. (UP)—There are evenings when, official duties ended, the King and Queen spend a homely hour by the fireside, the King listening to his phonograph and arranging his stamps, and the Queen knitting.

There must have been quite a few evenings recently when the Queen's clicking needles played a castanet accompaniment to the Gilbert and Sullivan music, for it is announced that she has knitted 12 woolen cow covers of the blue and pale pink for the Queen Mary's London Needlework Guild.

Almost every member of the royal family, including the King, the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, the Duke and Duchess of York, and the Duke of Gloucester, have sent gifts of money and clothing to the guild.

The Queen is not the only knitting contributor. Her daughter, the Princess Royal, has made two boys' jerseys, and her grandson, the Hon. George Lascelles, has crocheted two scarves.

The Queen is intensely interested in the Guild, and occasionally presides at the sewing-bees, herself.

SHEEP VISITED TOWN

Atmosphere of a Jungle Created In Yucca's Film

The tropical jungles of Africa re-created were recreated at down in Hollywood's back yard for "Nagana," the Universal drama featuring Tala Birell with Melvyn Douglas, opening today for a three-day run at the Yucca theatre.

In the Los Angeles river bed at Universal studios the technical department created a stretch of dense forest, so choked with luxuriant undergrowth that the only possible passage through it was in the knee deep water of a swampy stream that flowed among the trees.

Nearby were two native villages in a clearing, with a score of thatched huts, and a hundred stalwart savages to give life to the scene. Human skulls surmounted poles before the rude dwellings, and additional color was supplied by a confusion of queerly shaped gourds, spears, shields, baskets and pottery.

The whole was a perfect representation of the interior of the Dark Continent, according to Sir Gerald Grove, who lived in Africa for 14 years and is now a resident of Hollywood.

More than 12 miles of bamboo were used in building the two African villages. The bamboo, ranging in size from stalks an inch in diameter to others which are as much as four inches across, forms the outer walls of all buildings, which were made tight by the use of reeds, palm leaves and matted grasses within.

"Nagana" was directed by Ernst L. Frank, and Miss Birell's supporting cast includes Melvyn Douglas, Onslow Stevens and Miki Morita.

Kelly Says Eb Did Not Give All Yarns

Concerning F. B. Dickinson, March county ranchman who recently addressed the Men's class of Hotel Scharbauer, James E. Kelly, editor of The Stanton Reporter, has the following to say in his column "Ranch Talk."

"Eb Dickinson, owner of one of the finest Hereford ranches in West Texas, improved with modern conveniences, large and roomy ranch houses with running water throughout, electric lighting system that provides illumination for the house, the lots and the big stock barn by pushing a button; creep feeds his calves and keeps boys on lam as closely as does the most efficient bookkeeper in a bank; a cowboy on the range back in the early '80s on the north plains, before he became owner of several sections of land in Martin county, north of Stanton, etc., made a talk Sunday morning, Feb. 12, before the Men's Bible class at the Scharbauer hotel, Midland. Probably there is not another individual in Martin or Midland counties as full of stories, or knows the life of the pioneer cowboy, than Eb Dickinson. It was this story telling that made up Eb's address before the members of the class.

"Dickinson became a member of the Men's Bible class after wandering in the class room from the lobby of the Scharbauer one Sunday morning and finding a goodly number of old men, young men from the ranges and the various occupations in town, sitting in shirt sleeves, high-heeled boots, some clean shaven, others not, some tilted back in chairs with feet in window, basking in all the comfort and ease any ranch hand would desire, listening to the remarks presented by the teacher, Paul Vickers. Ever since that time on Sunday morning Dickinson has made the trip from his ranch to the class a distance of 20 miles. We never heard his teacher say it, but we'll bet the record will show Eb has never been late or absent from class, unless one of his prize Hereford bulls was "down" or he had to make an airplane flight to Chicago to witness the pinning of first prize ribbons on his show herd winning first honors in the National Stock show.

"This scribe knows some stories Eb tells that he never told that Bible class last Sunday, but he can't in town, sitting in shirt sleeves, high-heeled boots, some clean shaven, others not, some tilted back in chairs with feet in window, basking in all the comfort and ease any ranch hand would desire, listening to the remarks presented by the teacher, Paul Vickers. Ever since that time on Sunday morning Dickinson has made the trip from his ranch to the class a distance of 20 miles. All-Star Cast Of Ritz Picture Makes for Hit

Columbia has assembled an impressive cast in its latest offering at the Ritz theatre and with the principal roles entrusted to the care of such capable players as Leo Carrillo, Dickie Moore, Nat Pendleton, Thelma Todd and Barbara Weeks, with Frank Sheridan and Greta Granstedt also figuring prominently in the scheme of things, it is little wonder that "Deception" is the A-1 screen entertainment you will find at this theatre today and tomorrow.

The story, written especially for the screen by Nat Pendleton, is one played against a professional sports background. Pendleton, as Bucky, is grabbed out of the college athletic ranks by Carrillo, playing J. H. Hurley, crooked promoter, who sees a fortune in the rugged lad. There are no end of thrills in his "build up" to the championship and tense drama in the scenes that follow when Bucky realizes he has just been a pawn in the employ of a gambler.

The easiest thing to do is to chuck it all and be done with the crooked business for good, but Bucky doesn't choose the easiest way out. Instead he painstakingly goes about planning to double-cross the double-crosser. How he does it is the surprise of the picture and brings the production, which builds throughout in entertainment values, to a genuine smash climax.

"Deception" was produced by Bryan

Earth Foiled Light Experts

SANTA ANA, Calif. (UP)—Several years ago the late Dr. Albert A. Michelson, veteran University of Chicago physicist, built a vacuum tube a mile long on the Irvine ranch near here.

By casting a beam of light through this straight huge pipe he was able to determine that light travels at a speed of 186,284 miles a second. In the midst of his experiments he died. His work is being carried on by Dr. Francis G. Pease, of the Carnegie Institute's Mt. Wilson observatory, and Fred Pearson, of the University of Chicago.

Recently, the scientists resumed their experiments. Imagine their consternation when they discovered that their observations showed that light's speed was about 10 miles a second less than Dr. Michelson had found. Mother Earth was blamed. Tiny earth disturbances may have shortened the mile of ground upon which the pipe was laid, thereby causing the discrepancy in the observation. "Uncle Sam's coast and geodetic survey men were called into action. They went over the ground and measured the pipe's length nine times and took an average. A second inspection brought eight further measurements.

The field sheets then were sent to Washington, D. C. for a final check. Then the clock which operates a shutter and series of mirrors which throw the light beam back and forth through the pipe, was checked with the radio time signals broadcast by the naval observatory at Washington. Even the rate of swing of the pendulum and the vibration of an electrically driven tuning fork were checked.
