GETS AMENDMENT TACKLED TO BILL

If the pink boll worm bill finally passes, farmers should get all their money without paying anything for administration of disbursing the funds, an amendment by E. Frank Haag to the bill, which was reported by the sub-committee, has determined, through figuring, that the producers and cotton raisers are entitled to only $49,000, and had proposed an amendment to the original bill to this effect. They provided in their amendment that this sum should go to the raisers and producers only, and that no part should go to the gin men and oil mill men. They were asking no provision for the collection of data and administering the provisions under the bill. It persuaded the committee to add the other $19,000 to take care of this end of the job. They very kindly consented to my request.

Litigants Mean Nothing to Jury—Witness Wins

Juries do some highly improbable things occasionally, but consider the case of a recent judgment rendered in justice court here.

B admitted he did not own the equipment, but alleged that he sold the equipment to A for money, had not discharged a labor lien, he furthermore said he had no use for the equipment, other than as a place on which his turkeys could roost, but wanted payment for his labor before transfer of the equipment to A.

The jury retired and soon was back with a verdict giving the equipment to the woman, a witness! She had not even entered a cross action claim, but the litigants laughed at the judgment and have taken no steps to have the verdict set aside.

LIFE IS PLEASANT IN SMALL TOWN

When Louis T. Stone, the newspaper writer whose freakish, Munchausen-like little "nature stories" made Winsted, Conn., famous all over the country, died the other day, it was revealed that here had been one man to whom the fame and fortune offered by the big city were no attraction whatever.

Stone, it seems, had been offered jobs frequently on metropolitan papers. But he had always refused, preferring to stick in Winsted, and remarking, "I'm just a small town man—I'd get lost down there."

In that remark there is a good deal of sound sense—sense of a kind which a good many of us never quite had the wit to appreciate.

For generations it has been the tradition in this country that the really able man is going to gravitate, sooner or later, to the city. The city can pay him more money, it can give him a wider field to work in, it can flatter his ego and fatten his bank balance at the same time; and so, year after year, ambitious young men have been drained out of the small town and dumped into the vast hopper of the metropolis—often enough to their own bewilderment and disillusionment.

But this man wasn't fooled. He said, "I'm just a small town man"; and in that saying there was not so much modesty as a realization that life in a small town can be more satisfying and wholesome—can, in short, be more fun—than life in a big city, for the man who is geared to it.

For the small town man escapes a lot of grief. He escapes crowds, he escapes the depressing sight of those miles of identical apartment houses and "two-families" which constitute the waste lands of our great cities; he has the open country at his elbow, his life is set at a more leisurely pace, his nerves are not put under a constant strain, he has more chance for friendship, for recreation, for plain loafing if he likes.

All of us know this, when we stop to think about it. But most of the time we don't stop to think. We chase success down city streets, going after it so fast that we seldom have time to wonder why life no longer has the kick it used to have. How much better off some of us would be if we, too, had had the sense to say—"I'm just a small town man."

EDITORIAL NOTES

A Russian inventor in Paris produces for two cents a tablet of vegetable matter which, dissolved in a gallon of water, turns the fluid into a high-grade motor fuel said to equal gasoline. The French Academy of Sciences is investigating the statements of this well-known Russian professor. If motorists should take to carrying tubes of tablets, would filling stations, which do not charge for water, run the risk of becoming mere charitable institutions?

A hearty dinner, the London Daily Telegraph avers, should never be eaten, when one is about to go to the theatre to see a serious drama. In fact, Shakespeare and the classics are properly approached through a fast that keeps one wide awake and alert. But when modern farces and musical comedies occupy the boards—oh, well, a good dinner, even though tending to somnolence, has its claims to consideration, too.

Booth Tarkington points out that a stage production, once set, may run on and on before new audiences for years, but that a radio production is likely to be over for all time with a single production. Better and better radio plays, probably, will be written, but—can they ever hope, with a lone local outburst, to become literature?

Postmaster-General Walter F. Brown of the Hoover Cabinet retired to become the operating head of a railway line. Perhaps he will be appearing before his successor in the Post Office Department to declare, in words more than faintly familiar through having so often been poured into his official ears, that the railroads should really be better paid for transporting the mail.

RASPUTIN AND THE EMPRESS

adapted by FRANCO E. JONES from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture

The Reporter-Telegram presents this serialization of "Rasputin and the Empress" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture version of the dramatic fall of the Romanoff family, starring the three Barry brothers, Ethel, Joly and Lionel.

"If you ask me, gentlemen, it doesn't matter who he's locked up with—now."

Remezov shook his head doubtfully as Paul asked: "What do you mean by that?"

Wolff would have answered in the same manner if he were speaking of the most ignorant peasant's son. He said:

"I mean that the very able diagnosis given us by Dr. Remezov leaves us only one conclusion. His Highness has haemophilia. If he isn't dead by this time, he will be in a few hours. It's been the curse of his mother's house for six generations. Surely, you know that, doctor?" he finished earnestly.

Remezov shook his head. "My colleagues and I hesitated to reach so desperate a verdict," he said slowly.

Paul started in front of him. Wolff's manner was not to Paul's liking.

"How can you, a doctor, sit there and stand by a boy's death sentence without even having seen him?" he demanded.

Wolff merely shrugged his shoulders. It was Remezov who answered: "There's no guarantee, Excellency, that Wolff will be permitted to see him."

Paul's eyes blazed as he stiffened in his seat.

"I guarantee that!" he burst out. "How long has he been bleeding?"

Wolff asked, after a short silence. Remezov reflected.

"I was dismissed at noon yesterday—sixty-two hours."

"That's not long in a coma now," Wolff said. "I should look for the end tomorrow."

The black-bearded monk, Rasputin, stood at the right table, Tsarevitch's sickroom. Carefully he collected all the medicine bottles and swiftly he walked to the window and with a single sweep of his hand threw the bottles out into the yard below. As he opened the curtains, sunlight streamed through. He sat down and hurriedly closed the curtains.

At that moment there was a shrill scream from the boy on the bed who lay tossing his head and writhing as he called out twistedly and miserably: "Mammuschka!"

The next moment Rasputin was at the boy's side. Quite tenderly he bent over until he was staring directly into the boy's eyes. His out-dried fierily into those of the little Tsarevitch.

"There's no use calling her," the peasant said assuringly, "she's gone away."

"Where?" Alexei moaned miserably, fighting to avoid the man's glare.

Rasputin's voice was soft as he struggled to catch the boy's gaze and to soothe his feverish forehead. "To buy you a beautiful white elephant, with purple eyes, and a shiny golden horn on its back—"

"His voice trailed off.

Dr. Wolff to be taken slightly aback. They glanced at each other. Wolff turned to Paul at the sound of the Empress's voice.

"It has been a miracle, doctor," she said, smiling gratefully at Rasputin. "It is a great miracle." She turned to Remezov. "Come, doctor," she said in a burst of ecstasy, "tell them how you left my boy."

Paul began to speak before Remezov could answer. There was some slight doubt in his voice as he said to Rasputin:

"We're all very grateful, Father, for what you've done."

Paul turned to Wolff. "It's really remarkable," he said. Wolff shrugged his shoulders.

"I shall be the first to admit it," he said pointedly, "after I've made a slight examination."

He reached out for the boy's hand and his trained fingers found the pulse. Rasputin looked from Wolff to the Empress. Not deigning to speak directly to the great doctor, he asked the Empress:

"What does he want to know?"

"Oh, several things," Wolff answered easily. He bent down toward the boy. "Have you any pain, Your Highness?" he asked solicitously.

Alexei's eyes remained blank. Then, as he turned to Rasputin, a questioning look came into them. The peasant grinned at Wolff and the grin held an obvious sneer. He turned to the boy.

"Alexei, are you in any pain?" he asked smoothly.

Alexei's face remained entirely vacant as he replied.

With an arrogant stare, Rasputin asked: "Anything else?"

Wolff controlled his anger at Rasputin's tone and attitude.

"Yes," he replied. With his other hand he opened the boy's eye. The Tsarevitch shrank from him.

"I'm not going to hurt you, Your Highness," he said earnestly. His words seemed not to have been heard. The boy continued to shrink from his touch.

Paul, looking on, decided that the awkwardness of the situation demanded diplomatic intervention.

"Perhaps I can," he said cheerfully. "Perhaps I can," he said cheerfully. "Perhaps I can," he said cheerfully.

He walked toward the boy as he spoke. He reached out to touch Alexei, but the boy recoiled violently and strained toward Rasputin.

"I'm an old friend of his," he said. "I'm sorry," he said gently. He tried again to touch the boy's forehead. Again Alexei turned his head, burrowing it among the pillows.

"No," the Tsarevitch cried out. "No," he said. "No," he said. "No," he said.

Wolff was still holding the boy's pulse. Now, about to take a heart count, he said gently:

"Can you sit up, Your Highness? Just a little?"

Beautiful Love Temptress

Claudette Colbert, Nero's alluring queen, tempts Fredric March, Prefect of Rome, with her beauty in "The Sign of the Cross," dramatic road show spectacle coming to the Ritz theatre on Sunday for three days. This historical spectacle of Rome's mad hours under the rule of its profligate king, has been declared to be Cecil B. DeMille's greatest production.

"Sign of Cross" a Spectacle of Epic Proportion—Ritz

Cecil B. DeMille's magnificent spectacle, "The Sign of the Cross," began its local engagement at the Ritz theatre with a preview last night and, if the response of the audience means anything, surpassed all expectations.

Spectacle on a monumental scale, including a whole panoramic picture of Rome under the reign of Nero; a dynamic story of elemental events crowded into the space of forty-eight hours; a series of performances of sheer brilliancy. It is no wonder that audiences here, as well as all over the country, are cheering DeMille's achievement.

The spectacular type of film, such as DeMille himself made famous in the silent days, is one of the screen's finest contributions to entertainment. No other medium has the scope and variety of the camera. Now with the addition of sound, the great director has been able to surpass all his past efforts.

It is Charles Laughton's Nero, however, which is not only the outstanding characterization of the film, but one of the memorable characterizations of all times. Here is acting that approaches genius. Claudette Colbert, too, as the Empress Poppaea gives a performance of remarkable depth and power.

Batching Doesn't Cramp Style of Texas Tech Boys

LUBBOCK.—"Batching" is a common practice among men students of Texas Technological college. A recent questionnaire sent out by the college employment bureau revealed that 112 boys buy their own groceries, cook their own meals, and wash their own dishes. The average cost per month for room and board was $11.32, of which $6.29 was spent for groceries and $5.02 for room and utility bills.

One student who lives in an apartment with four others makes his room and board by doing all the buying, cooking, and housecleaning for his roommates. Regarding this arrangement the boys says, "The other fellows are getting by a lot cheaper than they could board and they're helping me get through school. I don't mind the work. In fact I think it does me about as much good as a home economics course would." At night he cooks a part of the dinner for the next day. He arises at 6 a. m. and prepares breakfast. Then, after getting off from school in the morning, he goes home to finish cooking dinner. He cleans house the afternoons he does not go to school. His roommates, who are quite satisfied with their housekeeper, say that he is especially good at buying. He buys large quantities of food at a time and spends hours in grocery stores comparing prices and hunting bargains.

A senior and a freshman who are roommates spend the least money "batching." Each pays $2.85 for room and utilities, $1.50 for groceries, and brings food from home valued at $1.50, a total of $5.85 per month spent for room and board. The senior, who has "batched" for three years since he has attended Tech, attributes his economy to experience and to buying specials.

The student who spends the most money stays by himself. He pays $10 for his room and $12.50 for groceries. When asked why he does not board, he said, "I could take the money I spend 'batching' and board, but the eats wouldn't be as good. At lunch, there is too much routine about a boarding house. Here I can eat when I get ready, sleep when I get ready, and study when I want to. Of course I have to work some, but what's a little work compared to my freedom?"

The average length of time that the students work per day in "batching" is two hours. Some work only fifteen minutes, while others put in as much as four hours.

Milk, butter, eggs, potatoes, syrup, bread, ham, bacon, steak, cheese, dried fruits, cakes, pies, jelly, jam, preserves, cereals, rice, beans, peas, lettuce, and other green vegetables are the foods the boys eat most. One boy, when asked what food he liked most replied, "Spinach." Another told what he had to eat in the following words: "Beans, beans, and more beans."

Over three-fourths of the students have gained in weight since they have been "batching." Five have gained 15 pounds, and none have lost appreciably. All are in excellent health.

Thirty-seven students are getting groceries from home that amount to $80.75, or $2.93 worth apiece per month. The "batchers" are carrying on some other experiments in economy that would put the thrifty householders to shame. One group of boys found they were paying 21 cents a day for rice and a pound of lightbread. They wrote home for recipes, meal and flour, and began making cornbread and biscuit with the result that they cut down their bread bill $3.30 a month.

One boy walks eight blocks to get milk for five cents a quart when he could have it delivered for seven cents. Another does his own tailor work, gets his roommate to cut his hair, uses no hair oil, uses baking soda for toothpaste, and shaving soap in place of cream. Some wash their own clothes while others send them home by parcel post.

Two boys do housework in exchange for their laundry. There are a number who shine their own shoes, darn their own socks, sew buttons on their clothes, and roll their own cigarettes. Nearly all read, but few attend few shows and buy few "luxuries," such as candy, chewing gum, and drinks.

Favorite ways of economizing on groceries are buying day-old bread at the bakery, getting butter and eggs through the mail from home, and buying large quantities of staple groceries at special prices on Saturdays. No social stigma is attached to students who "batch" at Tech. They attend dances, teas, parties, and other entertainments with no fear of being embarrassed.

Famous Midgets Coming to the Yucca This Week

Along with their trained elephants, camels, ducks and other animals, the famous Singer's Midgets, shown above, will be at the Yucca two days this week. They are internationally known and seldom have played in towns of less than 50,000. Their stage orchestra is excellent as is their entire program.

YOUNGSTERS TO REPRESENT OKLA CITY BALL CLUB

OKLAHOMA CITY, (UP).—A group of hustling youngsters who made a good account of themselves last year in the Western league will represent the Oklahoma City Indians in their debut in the Texas league this year.

Re-inforced in a few vital positions, the Oklahoma City team began spring practice here March 15. Rudy Jones, southpaw hurler, was the only member not present at the start. Jones had refused to sign a contract at the salary offered.

Even at this early stage, Manager Fred Luderus could almost name his line up for the opening game of the pennant race here April 11. His team ballied its way to the second half flag in last summer's Western league race.

The only important loss from the 1932 Indians is Ray Schalk, sensational second baseman, who was sold to the New York Yankees.

Three important additions have been made to offset Schalk's absence. Second Baseman Tom Holley was bought from Beaumont to fill Schalk's shoes. Red Harvel, hard-hitting outfielder, was purchased from Wichita and Pitcher Vernon Kennedy from St. Joseph.

Even at this optimistic possibility that one or more of the promising group of rookies may crowd into the picture, the team which takes the field against Dallas in the first game probably will look something like this: Tesmer; Kennedy, Benton or Matuzak p; Cholcher 1b; Holley 2b; McIsaac ss; Thielier 3b; Sloan cf; Harvel lf; J. The outfield packs a real punch. Johnson batted .373 last year and Harvel .342. Sloan is a speedy 18-year old Oklahoma City youngster.

Altogether a sensational debut in professional baseball last year. His batting average was not very hefty but he appears to be a natural hitter and both Owner Jack Holland and Luderus think he is a real find. He has a natural swing, is a fleet fielder and has a good arm. Summers, another holdover from last year, and several rookies will try to break into the outfield line.

It appears certain the infield of Cholcher, Holley, McIsaac and Thielier is set to go. Cholcher was the most improved ball player on the team last year and developed into a good fielder and a dangerous hitter. Hansen, who played shortstop until McIsaac was bought late in the season, will try to take the second or third base job from Holley or Thielier. There is little likelihood of him displacing McIsaac, who was one of the best shortstops in the Western league for several years.

The catching staff does not appear particularly strong although Tesmer is a heady and experienced receiver. His aid will be Chadwick and the latter may take over the No. 1 job because of his hettier hitting ability. Chadwick was handicapped by injuries last year.

Hollan is particularly proud of his pitching staff. All hurlers are youngsters and several of them flashes last season. Benton, Matuzak, Kennedy, Rudy Jones, Taylor and Boyles seem almost certain of regular berths. There are a dozen

K. P. Meeting Draws Visitors

BIG SPRING.—Good attendance marked a meeting of the Knights of Pythias Tuesday evening when a number of district officers appeared on the program.

Dr. Arey, district deputy from Lubbock, discussed the work of Pythians in this state. He reviewed accomplishments of the orphans home at Weatherford. Four members of the Lubbock lodge accompanied Dr. Arey to this city.

R. D. Lee, Midland, district deputy of this district, was present with three other officers of the Midland lodge.

A portion of the evening was given over to a discussion of admitting Lubbock into this district. Refreshments were served to approximately fifty persons. Chancellor Commander H. M. Rainbolt presided.

TO FOREGO TEXAS RELAYS

AUSTIN, (UP).—For the second consecutive year and due to economy, the University of Texas will forego its annual spring sports spectacle—the Texas relays.

Since the first Texas relays in 1925, this sports feature has been one of the outstanding track and field meets of the Southwest, comparing in size and importance with the meet held each year in Fort Worth in conjunction with the Southwestern Exposition and Fat Stock show.

A score of schools already have inquired of the athletic council for possible admission to the relays only to be informed by Business Manager Ed Olle the relays will not be held this year as an economy move.

The last year of the relays, 1931, more than 1,000 athletes competed, embracing in their number track stars from every section of the United States. Paavo Nurmi, famous Finn, Jole Ray, American speed merchant, Harold Osborne and Charley Faddock, all have flashed their wares at the Texas relays in bygone days.

Postponement this year does not mean that the Texas relays will die. Coach Clyde Littlefield, Texas track and football mentor, hopes to revive the games as soon as possible, perhaps next year.

PUBLIC NATATORIUM

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UP).—This city claims to have had the first publicly regulated swimming pool in the United States. It dates back to the early 1700's when, investigations by Dr. Carl Sastaneda show, the authorities of Mission San Jose set apart two swimming pools in the San Antonio river. One was for the use of the Spanish soldiers and the other by the Indians attached to the mission.

more or others on the roster about whom little is known but one or two may come through to oust one of the regulars.

The entire team practically is made up of players who got their first taste of Class A baseball last season. They developed rapidly, as their pennant winning record shows. Holland expects his team to be a pennant contender. He has assured fans that if a weakness shows up in any part of his young machine, necessary replacements will be made.

Famous Midgets to Stage Parade; Show Two Days at Yucca

The world's famous Singer's Midgets, coming to the Yucca theatre Wednesday and Thursday, is the largest group of the smallest people in the world.

Besides the 30 tiny humans, the company includes three trained white elephants, a camel, a real reindeer, and a singing duck. In connection, they have a complete 12-piece orchestra.

The origin of this company is most interesting. Seventeen years ago Baron Leopold Von Singer of Vienna, Austria, a wealthy theatre-owner and, incidentally, not a midget, began assembling these little people and developing their talents as a hobby to serve as recreation from his strenuous business affairs.

They were not used in connection with public performances until 1917, when the management of the New York Hippodrome prevailed upon the Baron to bring his troupe to the United States for a single week's engagement at their theatre.

The success of the Midgets on this occasion was so great that offers were made for their services from theatrical managers all over the country. They have played in the United States ever since, appearing in the largest theatres in this country. They travel in their own private railroad cars, carrying with them all of the necessary stage equipment to put on their performance.

One of the features of their stay in Midland will be a street parade Wednesday. Efforts are being made to secure the high grab of an American doughboy and give us an entirely new type of war drama, making "Bill Jones," the rebellious soldier, live as no screen soldier has ever lived before in motion pictures.

The plot is new and well woven. The characters are human, and the acting is superb, probably because the cast is of the first order. Tracy, with his dynamic personality and ready flow of crackling dialogue deserves first mention.

It is grand entertainment from start to finish, and it will satisfy those who cry for artistic direction and dramatics as well. Notably is it distinctive in that "Private Jones" shows us one doughboy's attitude toward the war, which doesn't follow the orthodox story book one.

FIND HARMONY

EL PASO, (UP).—Indians, Mexicans and Anglo-Saxon Americans get along famously at Ysleta, near here, which many claim was a settlement before San Augustine, Fla. They occupy different parts of the town. The Indians still retain tribal organization, though conforming to state and federal laws.

Mayor Leon Goodman

GOODMAN FOR MAYOR

Vote for your choice—

Be a Good Citizen and Vote

WHY VOTE FOR LEON GOODMAN:

- 1. He always pays his poll tax.
2. Cost of operating the City Government has been reduced over 100 per cent since 1930. Expenses for 1930-31 were $72,622. Expenses for 1932-33 were $35,500. Expenses for 1933-34 at present rate $30,000.
3. The Mayor and Council have completed plans for a still further cut in current operating expenses.
4. Economical handling of the city's business has increased the balance on hand on March 31, 1929 of $32,475.96 to $45,078.08 on March 31, 1933.
5. The city has already collected sufficient taxes to meet current bond requirements, and if taxpayers become able to make payments assessed, the tax rate can be drastically cut and the city still remain on a first class business basis.
6. Opinions to the contrary notwithstanding, records show Midland has one of the lowest water rates in West Texas.
7. Law suits have been filed by several larger cities for lowered utility rates. Utility rates can not be forced down without process of law. When the larger cities have failed to do this, can Midland afford to waste funds seeking to do what cities many times its size can not? Mayor Leon Goodman promises consumers the benefit of every legitimate and ethical reduction possible to procure in utilities. Critics should know facts before stating too blatantly what can and ought to be done.
8. Mayor Leon Goodman has made numerous trips for the City of Midland, some of which were to seek lower utility rates. In not one single instance has the City paid any of his expenses. In addition to never having an expense account, the Mayor has once already reduced his meagre salary, and will cut it another 25 per cent after his reelection April 4.
9. The Mayor and Council are working in perfect harmony. The Council includes five of Midland's best citizens. Leon Goodman and these and other councilmen have conducted Midland's affairs through the good times and bad. Examination of records of Texas cities will show Midland's financial condition and solvency are far above the average. Bond payments are being made when due. The city has never defaulted and has funds now to pay all its current debts.
10. Keen judgment, loyalty to the people's interests, faith in Midland, ambitions for Midland, knowledge of the city's finances, strict economy with the people's money are needed to continue Midland's good reputation and Midland's standing as a solvent, progressive city—so why put in untried, inexperienced leaders when the men who have proved their ability and faithfulness are willing to do this task at the insistence of their fellow citizens.
11. Evidence of Leon Goodman's ability as a director of city affairs and his interest in handling public utility matters for the protection of the people is seen in the fact that he helped organize the West Texas Municipal League for cooperation of West Texas towns in dealing with utilities, and is today president of that organization.

When Leon Goodman went into office the city owed, besides its bonds voted by the people themselves, $31,530. While Goodman was in office, the city issued $41,588.60 for the city hall and paving, which the people voted on themselves. This made a total debt of $73,118.60 besides the bond issue already voted. Under Goodman's administration and the economic policy of councilmen, the debt has been reduced by $28,918.60.

Under Leon Goodman's administration, Midland has absolutely ceased to borrow money for current operating expenses. For some years Midland had borrowed $10,000 to $14,000 per year for operating expenses, and was, therefore, continually nearly a year behind. Goodman and the council put the city on a cash basis, and for the past three years not a red cent has been borrowed for operating expense. This means a saving in interest, better financial standing of the city, and complete current knowledge year by year of what the expense for the year is.

Under the administration of Goodman and the council, water rates have been reduced 25 percent on the minimum, and reduced 33 1-3 percent on all water used over the maximum allowed. In other words, Goodman and the council have cut the water rates one-fourth and one third, depending on amount of consumption, since they have been in office.

Every statement made above may be verified by consulting the city records. All figures and all facts cited are official and are from the records.

Hood Rubber Co. Changes Policy

AKRON, Ohio, March 24.—The Hood Fire Corporation, Akron, Ohio, announces a change in policies governing the distribution and sale of Hood tires effective March 21.

Only two lines of automobile tires and one truck tire line will be sold by Hood, making possible substantial economies in distributing and inventory costs and generally simplifying the business for both the corporation and its distributing organization, according to company officials.

The program was adopted, Hood executives said, after careful consideration of the many problems now confronting the tire industry and in the effort to permit dealers to stock two complete lines of tires in all sizes, a practice now almost impossible.

The Hood statement said that in the opinion of the company's management, the consumer public was generally confused by the many tires offered bearing various brands of widely-differing quality and that the new plan would clarify the buyers' understanding of both price and product.

Revisions in price will now be possible on a second economic basis due to the direct savings resulting from this constructive merchandising reform, Hood officers stated.

HOGAN'S TESTIMONY BEFORE THE GOVERNORS' COUNCIL, WASHINGTON

Editor's Note: The following is continuation of testimony of Senator T. S. Hogan of Montana before the governors' meeting with the secretary of the interior last week. The rest of the testimony was carried in The Reporter-Telegram Thursday.

The number of barrels of oil and bushels of wheat produced in the United States in 1932 were almost identical—about 783 millions of each.

In spite of an average price for oil of about one half the cost of production the oil brought the producers at the wells where produced about twice as much as the wheat brought the farmers, not at the primary markets but at the farms.

The crude oil sold for about 100 million dollars more than the total cotton crop brought the cotton growers.

No authentic figures can be given of the amount of money paid by the consuming public for all oil and gas products but it no doubt equals or exceeds the total value of all agricultural products including livestock.

The 12 billion dollars estimated as the investment in the oil industry just about equals the total of all bonds and primary obligations outstanding against all the railroads of the United States.

It exceeds by more than a billion the total of farm mortgages.

These figures clearly demonstrate that any program of national recovery from this depression must include the oil industry.

No consideration of this subject can arrive at a just and intelligent decision without giving due deliberation to that dangerous and highly controversial subject of the amount of oil contained in all the known oil fields of the United States.

The amortization of the tremendous investment in the industry must be figured against the extent of these reserves in arriving at a fair price for crude oil.

The government's policy in encouraging or discouraging exports must be governed by the answer found to this question.

Mistakes of the past must not be used to discourage the application of new scientific knowledge in this field of investigation.

Within practical limits the ultimate barometer recovery from any oil field, whose limits have been defined by drilling and the character, thickness and porosity of the pay horizon determined, may be estimated with reasonable certainty.

I submit with some temerity my own estimate made through a study of every important oil field in the district of the United States. That estimate is approximately thirteen billion barrels. With business on a normal basis and allowing the ordinary annual increase due to increased population and other factors that amount of oil would be exhausted in about eleven years.

Other estimates by men whose findings are entitled to the greatest consideration range from ten billion to fourteen billion barrels.

Thus, it will be seen that the investment in the industry is roughly one dollar for every barrel of oil in the proven oil fields.

Time forbids an analysis in this statement of the probable future discoveries but the more thorough the study of that subject the more apparent it becomes that the major portion of the nation's oil reserves have already been found.

In the 73 years since oil was discovered in this country up to this date sixteen billion barrels have been produced and I believe every impartial investigator will agree that more than half of the production of all proven pools has been exhausted.

With all possible emphasis I respectfully suggest that an industry with a direct investment of 12 billions dollars and 30 billion dollars in oil powered equipment should plan its future over a period of at least twenty years.

For obvious reasons no unit or group of units in the industry itself can make such plans.

There is no agency short of the federal government that can act with sufficiently broad powers to protect and control this great industry.

I fully recognize that the constitutional authority as well as the economic wisdom of this course will be promptly and vigorously challenged.

This administration and this congress has already demonstrated the practicability and the method of meeting this constitutional objection.

The official declaration by the congress of a national emergency legalizes the administrative control of any industry. That has already been done in the banking business; it will presently be done in the farming business.

As to the objections which are based on the theory of the individual privilege of the citizen to engage in competitive business I earnestly would the claimant be right that they are talking about something that has long since ceased to exist.

The small oil man is in about the same position as one of the thirteen million unemployed—lots of individual liberty, but nothing to do with it.

To those who place their reliance on an interstate compact I earnestly say that the oil fields of the nation will be exhausted before such a compact will ever function.

There is no other great industry which could be so promptly put on a sound financial basis as the oil industry.

Production and consumption are in relative balance. There is no recurring new crop to annually disturb the balance as there is in agriculture.

And let me now boldly say that just in agriculture there can be no recovery except through an increased price, neither can the oil industry be saved except through an increased and a fair price for crude oil.

So far as I know, every oil company and group of companies denies the responsibility for fixing the price of crude oil. The mysterious oil forces which operate to that end have never been fully identified.

The one impartial authority which could fix that price with fairness to all the units of the industry and with justice to the people of the nation who consume the oil is the government of the United States.

Man, Dog and Horse Reach Midland on Trip from Brazil

Charles Frederick Hofstetter, a young and daring Swiss-American who hails from Brazil, reached Midland in his cross country-ride. He is a spectacular figure as he travels across the country, riding his light gun horse, named "Flash," and attired in regular cowboy regalia, topped off with a black 10-gallon Stetson hat. His collie dog, "Ranger," follows very closely and this unusual trio is often called "The Three Musketeers."

When this trio gets into action, "Flash" is laden with a colorful blanket roll, roomy leather saddle bags and a bag of trail supplies. The young man then decided to continue his journey to Hollywood, where he expects to enter the movies. He has been on this trip 19 months. When the trio left Brazil, Ranger was a young pup, and they have traveled 15,000 miles, an average of 35 miles a day.

Flash, now nine and one-half years old, was once a wild horse of Brazil. His present owner has had him seven years.

On his way north, Hofstetter swam the Panama canal in a narrow place. He entered the United States from Mexico and traveled up the Atlantic coast to New York City. From there, he crossed over to Chicago and on Oct. 3, was given a testimonial letter by the city's late mayor, Anton J. Cermak.

Hofstetter is master of six languages, and is studying the seventh—Spanish. He speaks German, Italian, French, English, Swiss, and a German dialect commonly spoken in some parts of Switzerland.

On the highway east of here, a New York car stopped with a French family in it, to interview him, because he had every appearance of a West Texas cowboy. When he answered their inquiries in perfect French, the family greeted him as a long lost countryman and showered him with their supply of fruits.
