CUT-OFF PLANS HERE TENTATIVE

Hope for getting the Warfield cut-off built any time before September depends on whether federal road funds are allocated to the state. Judge W. R. Ely, state highway commissioner, told county and chamber of commerce representatives from Midland in a conference at Abilene Friday.

The county and Midland chamber of commerce representatives, Judge E. H. Barron, Clarence Scharbauer, Leon Goodman and Paul J.ickers, went to see the state highway chairman regarding the Warfield cut-off, completion of the laying of caliche west of town and early completion of the paving. All this work depends on whether federal aid is granted. Judge Ely said. Scharbauer took the men to Abilene.

NOTED OFFICIAL TO ROTE MEETING

Joseph W. (Bud) Jackson of Madison, Wis., a director in Rotary International, will represent that body at the annual conference of the forty-first Rotary district at San Angelo, May 1 and 2.

John P. Howe, president-elect, and R. V. Lawrence, secretary-treasurer-elect, will be the official delegates from the Midland Rotary club, although from eight to twelve other members are contemplating attendance.

The meeting will include from 600 to 1,000 visitors from the 61 clubs in north and west areas of Texas. The Ballinger Rotary club is to be host jointly with the San Angelo club and members of the Runnels county organization are serving on the conference committees. These groups are active now completing the program which includes varied entertainment features in addition to the business sessions and luncheons.

Mr. Jackson is to take the place of Carl Steeb, of Columbus, Ohio, another director of the international unit, who will be unable to attend.

Jackson will speak at the general conference session in the San Angelo municipal auditorium, Monday morning, May 1, and at the club executives' breakfast at 7:15 o'clock Tuesday morning at the Marie Antoinette ballroom of the Hilton hotel.

Fifty-three meetings, similar to the one to be held at San Angelo are being staged in the United States and Canada this spring. Total attendance is expected to be 50,000 or more, for they are the "high spots" of the Rotary year. They rank second in importance and interest to Rotarians to the international convention which is to be held in Boston June 26-30.

Midland's one-act play cast, fresh from winning first place at the Ballinger tournament, went into the finals with Abilene and Lockney Saturday night, when the cast hammered its way via judges' decisions towards the front while other schools, including Wichita Falls, Lubbock and others fell by the wayside.

The Midland cast was to play at 8 o'clock, Lockney at 9 and Abilene at 10. The decision was expected at 11 o'clock.

Midland and Abilene presented straight drama, but Lockney gave a comedy drama.

The Midland cast is composed of John Ed Crabb, Roberta Dunagan, Eddie Blanche Cowden, Jessie Lou Armstrong, Ernestine Holder, Helen Foster, Maggie Allen, Roy Skipper and Joe Roberts. It is directed by Mrs. L. K. Barry, who rapidly is establishing herself as one of the finest play directors in the Interscholastic League of Texas. She began her work by winning the state championship at Temple and since has continued her work with uniform success, both in the field of dramatics and in her coaching of the Latin department of the Midland high school.

The play is called "Elmer." John Ed Crabb, playing the title role, was voted by judges as giving the best individual characterization at the Ballinger tournament, and Miss Dunagan was given third place among the girls.

This road was started in the administration of County Judge M. R. Hill and the last commissioner court and completed by the present administration. More grading on the road will be done when moisture justifies the work, but the route is now passable.

The new road eliminates many turns and corners as well as shortening the distance slightly.

First Petition Of Its Kind Filed at Pecos

What is believed to be the first petition filed in Texas under Section 75 the new bankruptcy act provided only for farmers, and possibly the first ever filed in the United States, was placed before the federal judge at Pecos last week by George W. Dunaway, Midland attorney.

The new act was one of the last signed by former President Herbert Hoover.

In compliance with the measure such a petition sets forth a farmer wants to gain an extension of time on the payment of his debts. Granting of the petition would stop any money judgments or foreclosures being made either on real estate mortgages or personal property if he can get 50 per cent of his creditors in number and in amount of total indebtedness to sign the application, which would thus be a technical waiver, for continuance. The court, if satisfied this is fair and equitable and made in good faith, will approve the extension of time.

The act further provides if the court approves the extension or not the farmer cannot be forced into bankruptcy or into liquidation without his written consent.

The congress passed the act on March 3. The provision runs for five years, and apparently was intended as an emergency act.

While the matter is pending in federal court the court will have full charge of the farmer's operations.

In this case, the petitioner is a Martin county farmer who inherited five sections of rich farming land in 1929, at the height of the boom. He borrowed $7 an acre on land worth then $20 an acre, and worth $15 now. Moreover, he bought cattle and mortgaged them for more than the present price of cattle. In case his land creditor, an insurance company, forecloses, the holder of his cattle, paper likely would do the same. A hearing was due to be held on the matter Saturday, but was put off at the request of Dunaway.

The case is more interesting from the standpoint no knowledge as to the legal procedure of a case based on the act seems to be held.

Kids Selling Worms By the Yard Now

Childish fancy coupled with an advertisement run in The Reporter-Telegram is selling fishing worms by the yard for Dolores and Billy Barron, 307 North Marientfeld.

A few weeks ago they wrote a letter to the Midland Hardware & Furniture Co., offering to sell to all comers "nice, fat, juicy worms."

Their father, Clyde Y. Barron, wishing to humor the children in their "business," took an ad in the newspaper, abetting the business.

Since, the till has registered more than $3, including the purchase of a man from California, who heard Midlanders talking of the business. "I didn't know there were worm ranches in this section," he said. "We have several for that purpose in my state."

TO DOMINATE CURRENCY IN SPITE OF GOP

Assured Passage of Bills Challenges GOP Leaders

(By United Press)

Administration leaders predicted today easy passage of measures giving President Roosevelt semi-dictatorship powers over national currency, despite bitter opposition by the republican bloc.

Signed republican declarations, said to be supported by former Secretaries of the Treasury Mills and Mellon, challenged the constitutionality of the proposed bill.

Senate democrats agreed to compromise and would amend the bill to include a provision to permit Roosevelt to order free coinage of silver at a ratio fixed by him.

Prime Minister MacDonald cancelled formal calls to devote time in the Roosevelt conference. He and Herriot of France declared separately that their talks chiefly were concerned in forcing all nations to return to the gold standard.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

A total of 22 states have now adopted old-age pension laws. In these states indigent men and women who are too old to work will not have to go to the poorhouse and suffer the stigma of pauperization. Instead they will be able to draw regular incomes from their state treasuries, and while these incomes will not be large they will at least keep their recipients from starvation and will save their self-respect.

But that is not the whole story. According to reliable estimates, the 22 states involved will find this means of caring for the aged poor less expensive than the old system. The poorhouse is not only cruel and spirit-breaking; it is outlandishly expensive. And, incidentally, the pension laws will remove from the labor market those pathetic old job-hunters whose desperation causes them to agree to work for microscopically low wages.

All in all, the arguments for old age pension laws are pretty strong. The remaining 26 states in the union, to say nothing of the national Congress, would do well to listen to them.

The Town Quack

(Reserves the right to "quack" about everything without taking a stand on anything.)

Today a farmer made this remark: "My farm journal told me that the sow would make me rich. So I got the sow, but I'm still poor. Then my farm journal told me to buy a cow. So I bought a cow, but I'm still poor. Then the farm journal told me that a hen would make me rich, so I bought the hen. But I'm still poor. I think the farm journals desire to be helpful, but their beautiful theories do not prove out."

The farmer of today feels surfeited—not with cash but with advice. In the last ten years he has received a tremendous amount of advice—and most of the advice came from gentlemen occupying swivel chairs.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED Karl Schlemmer, certified ship's captain, is the only living person who knows where $3,000,000 in gold lies beneath the sea. Schlemmer receives financial backing from a woman, and with a deep-sea diver, Steve McCreary, he sets a ship and goes to hunt the sunken gold. The ship runs into a storm and McCreary and Schlemmer are the only two to escape in a dory. During their aimless drifting McCreary acquires one-half of the treasure chart. They are finally picked up by a passing ship. Three years pass and McCreary and Schlemmer get aboard a scientific expedition boat that will cruise in the Bahama waters, near where the gold is buried. The expedition is financed by Diane Templeton, a beautiful young heiress. McCreary is falling in love with Diane, but he will not admit it.

CHAPTER FOUR Diane piloted McCreary up to a microscope, adjusted it, and said, "Here, take a look." He applied his eye. "What do you see?" "A lot of little maggots."

"Take a good look," said Diane. "A few million years ago one of them was you. One day—maybe a million years later—you floated upward—and many others. The wheel of life began to turn—a billion living things were snuffed out, a few were launched into a new cycle—and you among them, because you were strong. That's how life began. Ages went by, and you got the muscles and cells that enabled you to think, and dream, and smile—you really became human when you learned how to smile."

McCreary was unsmiling, almost harsh. "You read all that out of a book. You don't know what life is. You've just played with it and read about it—you've never lived it." "You didn't let me finish," she continued. "There are millions of years between you and what you just saw under that microscope—but as far as you're concerned it's been a waste of time, because you don't know how to smile."

"You're not kidding me." He pointed to the microscope. "That's just another one of your toys." "You're not kidding me," she declared. "You're getting interested. Maybe I'm getting under your skin." "Maybe you're getting into my hair."

Diane sighed and shook her head. "You've a positive genius for pretty speeches, haven't you?" She took him by the arm. "Come on—I'll show you some more of my toys." Diane took Steve on an inspection tour, showed him how to develop film, and many other things until he suddenly took her into his arms and gave her a kiss that almost broke her back.

"Does that come under the head of science—or art?" she inquired. "Whichever it is, you have definite possibilities." He let her go. "Disappointed?" she asked. "Yes." "Why?" "I wanted to find out if you were the sort of woman I figured you—and you are." Diane was contemptuous. "I suppose you'd have liked me better if I'd slapped your face."

"Sure I would!" "She hauled off and gave him a terrific slap in the face. McCreary smiled broadly. "Good heavens—you do know how to smile!" she exclaimed. A call from Schlemmer to his cabin caused McCreary to leave. "What's the matter, Karl?" the lad asked as he entered the Captain's quarters. "One of the crew has just found a stowaway in the forward hold."

(tender, there should be only two of us aboard—not three. You understand?)" "It's all right with me—if I'm one of the two."

"Yah. It's just a question of mathematics."

Down below the sea, Diane, in a diving bell, was watching a camouflaged crab putting pebbles and clam shells on its back to disguise itself, while Jackson recorded the action in celluloid.

"Look! Here comes an octopus—right for Mr. Camouflage!" she exclaimed excitedly. It was at the instant when McCreary was about to descend in a diving suit, Diane saw him ascend while Jackson filmed an octopus eating the crab.

"This is marvelous. I wouldn't have missed it for anything," she declared. "There's your pal—Tarzan of the deep!" said Jackson, noticing Steve for the first time.

"He hates having his picture taken," she said. "Let's take it." McCreary focused his camera on McCreary and photographed him at work.

The following day Schlemmer got the personnel of the expedition together at mess.

"The place I tell you about is off Point Diego, in the Bahamas. Wait till you see what you find there. Talk about specimens! We saw lots of them in the old submarine days—even we cruised near the bottom."

"You must have had some interesting experiences in your sub days, Captain," Jackson remarked. "I'm going to pump you dry some day. You must have a lot to tell."

"Rally, Captain Schlemmer. I can't understand your impatience. I told you we were going things as soon as we finished here," said Chapman.

"Yah. But you will not get to McCreary rose, trying hard to control his fury. "What difference does it make? We've got all the time in the world." With that he left and went back to the deck to lend men working the pumps.

"Who's down in my diving suit?" McCreary was harsh. He had given strict orders that no one was to touch it.

"Miss Templeton," said the helper. "All right." He looked toward the water, reflected, and then said: "You can blow. I'll tend bar for her."

The helper left, leaving the pump to McCreary. The diver worked it for a minute, meditating as he did. Then he took out his pipe and began to load it with tobacco. That finished, he seated himself near the pumps and watched the sea directly below. This expression on his face was grim. There was a buzz in the undersea telephone. McCreary picked up the instrument.

"What's the matter?" Diane asked. "Don't you get my rope signals?" "What do you want?" McCreary asked.

"What's wrong with the air supply. I'm getting dizzy." "You've been dizzy all your life. How long have you been down there?"

"About half an hour. I want to come up." "Well, come on up." "I don't know how."

20,000 Cheers for "20,000 Years in Sing Sing"; Ritz Production a Great Picture One's Not Likely to Forget

Chalk up another smash hit for Warner Bros. who have been giving us the greatest lot of motion pictures we have seen this year or any other year. In "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," which opened at the Ritz theatre last night, the Warner Bros.—First National studios have taken the sensational book of the same title by Lewis E. Lawes, warden of Sing Sing prison, and imbued it with a vitality and appeal that has made one of the most stirring film epics this reviewer has seen.

It is a picture which grips you, that holds you, fascinates you from start to finish. For it presents in a most graphic style the lives and emotions of a thousand men without women, and their women without—who wait for their men to serve their time with an undying loyalty—that even if misplaced, is nevertheless touching in its depth.

There is comedy, and poignant pathos to relieve the gripping story. Arthur Byron plays the role of the warden in the picture.

To Spencer Tracy must go the palm for one of the most sincerely impressive characterizations he has given. His work is a masterpiece. Spencer Tracy is seen as Tom Connors, a former "big shot" who is sentenced to Sing Sing for an indefinite period of from 5 to 30 years.

A desperate abortive attempt at jail delivery in which Connors was supposed to take part, was frustrated by the guards and the warden.

AT THE LIBRARY New books on the shelves are: "The Human Body" by Logan Clendening, "a sensible and lively book on the physiology of the human body, and the diseases to which it is heir"; "Letters of an Early American Traveller"—Mary Austin Holley, Her Life and Her Works, 1784-1846" by Mattie Austin Hatcher, who, a cousin of Stephen F. Austin, was an extraordinary personality as well as a delightful writer and one of the most intrepid travelers of her day. Growing up in Connecticut, she lived successively on Long Island, in Boston, in Kentucky and in Louisiana, before she finally made her home in Texas. Seen across a hundred years, her "Texas" is not only unique as the first book ever written in English on a great empire, its pages are still full of vitality.

Other recent books are "Riata and Spurs" by Charles A. Siringo, about which Will Rogers says, "There must be millions that would like to read the straight facts . . . this book is it," and "My Story" by Mary Roberts Rinehart, more thrilling than her own novels.

Richard Dix, Playing at Yucca Today, Sets Record for Consistent Popularity; Current Picture Is "Great Jasper"

The record for consistent popularity of Richard Dix is surpassed by no other film star. In these hectic days when the maximum life of a luminary is estimated at about five years, Dix's unceasing popularity for more than a decade is something to think about admiringly.

He is one of the few stars of the old days who made the transition from silent to talking pictures without set-back. He had appeared in more than fifty silent pictures, many of them classics worthy of the Hall of Fame, such as his "The Vanishing American."

In the talkies he has starred in such successes as "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "Cimarron," "Donovan's Kid," "The Public Defender," "The Conquerors," "The Roar of the Dragon," "Hell's Highway" and other productions.

These pictures have called for a large assortment of roles, from the Indian of "The Vanishing American" and the frontiersman in "Cimarron," to the banker in "The Conquerors" and the lady-killer-morforman of "The Great Jasper," his current RKO-Radio picture.

Perhaps there is no better judge of the reasons why triumph has continuously wooed the actor than the man who directed his many pictures, including "The Great Jasper." This is J. Walter Ruben, who declares that Dix is the most painstaking actor he has ever known.

Director Ruben also attributes much of Dix's success to his modesty.

"As a matter of fact," he says, "Dix is at times too eager to please, the most humble critic. He has had to learn to accept suggestions with a grain of salt, but he always listens courteously."

"If the scene has been wrong, Dix is the first to realize it and ask for a re-take," according to Ruben.

"The Great Jasper," an adaptation of Fulton Oursler's popular novel, stars Dix in the title role at the Yucca theatre, opening today.

Wera Engels, RKO-Radio's new import from Germany, makes her debut in an American production in this film. Others in the cast are Florence Eldridge, Betty Furness, Edna May Oliver and Bruce Cabot.

Payne Victim of Printer's Mistake

AUSTIN.—A grindstone, plain, old fashioned grindstone that "rooked and shambled in its gate" proved too much for a learned doctor at the University of Texas.

In editing one of Robert Frost's poems for a textbook on American literature, Dr. L. W. Payne Jr., professor of English at the university, included the line "rooked and shambled in its gate" just as it appeared in one of Frost's books. Dr. Payne added a learned, professorial note to the effect that the word gate referred to the wooden mechanism upon which the grindstone revolved. This explanation, found after an extensive search by the erudite editor, seemed to fill the bill.

When Frost's "Collected Poems" was published, however, Dr. Payne found that the corrected typography in "The Grindstone" made the line read "rooked and shambled in its gate," and that he had been the victim of a type error in Frost's first volume.

Dr. Payne will have the pleasure of introducing Robert Frost, his friend of long standing, to literature classes, former students, and other visitors on the campus during the Semi-Centennial celebrations and Fourth Annual Round-Up, April 24-30. The great poet will lecture informally and read from his works at the new Hog Memorial auditorium on the first night of the anniversary week, and will be honored speaker also at the annual banquet, Wednesday night, of Phi Beta Kappa, honorary scholarship fraternity.
