HIGHBROWED ESKIMOS

The term "highbrow" is a pretty well established part of American speech nowadays, and everybody understands exactly what it means; it is, consequently, a bit surprising to find Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of anthropology at the Smithsonian Institution, reporting to the American Philosophical Society that the word is really all wrong.

The height of a man's brow, says Dr. Hrdlicka, is no gauge whatever of his mental powers. If it were, Eskimos would be the world's brainiest folk, as their brows average about 9 per cent higher than normal. A low, retreating brow can house a brilliant brain, and under the loftiest and most imposing of domes there can exist a complete mental vacuum.

Just what we ought to do about this isn't quite clear. "Highbrow" is too good a word to discard, even if it doesn't really mean anything. Probably we shall go right on using it—all of us, that is, except the highbrows.

A flavor that neither possesses alone

Turkish tobacco is to Cigarettes what Seasoning is to Food Early in the 17th century, tobacco seed from America was taken to Turkey. Different soil, different climate, different temperatures night and day, and different farming methods produced an entirely new tobacco—small in size, but very rich and aromatic. This tobacco is known generally as Turkish tobacco; but there are as many varieties of Turkish as there are kinds of apples. Four certain spots are famous for the quality of their Turkish tobacco—Xanthi and Cavalla in Greece; Samsoun and Smyrna in Turkey. And it is principally from these places that our buyers get the Turkish for Chesterfield. These Turkish tobaccos are blended, in just the right amount, with Domestic tobaccos. It is this blending and cross-blending of just the right amount of Turkish and Domestic tobaccos which gives Chesterfield a flavor that neither possesses alone.

THE CIRCUS QUEEN Murder

ADOLPHE MENJOU
GRETA NISSEN

Thatcher Colt, Police Commissioner, and his secretary, Miss Kelly, go on a vacation to Gilead, N. Y., a small town. Colt assumes the name of Smith to avoid detection. The "Great Rainey Show Circus" is en route to Gilead. Rainey asks Josie La Tour, beautiful aerial acrobat, to succumb to the wiles of Lovell, the man who is putting up the money for the circus. For Lovell has stated that he will stop giving money unless the girl does as he wishes. She refuses, for although she is married to Flanrin, her aerial partner, she is deeply in love with the Great Sebastian, star aerialist of the circus. Josie threatens Flanrin with divorce and the bereaved husband pleads with Sebastian to make the girl change her mind.

CHAPTER THREE
The sun was bright and hot as the circus parade marched down the street to the tune of blaring music. A cloudless sky made it a perfect day for the big event. The town of Gilead seemed a mass of varied colors with its few thousand people lining the main street and the gay circus banners floating in the warm breeze.

Thatcher Colt and Miss Kelly stood in the crowds on the sidewalk. Beads of perspiration were on Colt's forehead. With a crackling noise, a peanut shell broke under Colt's thumb.

Kelly looked at the Police Commissioner. "That's the third bag of peanuts in an hour."
"So what?"
"So despicable. You know peanuts always give you indigestion."
"Not in Gilead."
Kelly grinned.

"There's balm at Gilead, Kelly!" Colt went on, "dies of it. This is what I've been dreaming about for years—a hideaway where there's nothing to do but kill time—where there isn't a chance in the world of running into somebody who—"
"Commissioner!"

Colt looked up sharply. An expression of dismay crossed his face as he saw the owner of the voice. It was Dugan.

The press agent's face beamed with vociferous joy as he pumped Colt's hand. "Well—I'll be anything you say!" He turned to Miss Kelly. "And you, Patsy!"

"Hello, Jim."
Dugan grinned and looked at Colt. "I could hardly believe my eyes—it's you—it's you!—the greatest Police Commissioner of the greatest city of the greatest country in the world. Not a mirage—not an illusion—Thatcher Colt in person!"

"Inny, apsay!" Colt whispered. "Tune down, you loud speaker! I'm on a vacation. You're talking to a guy named Smith. The only person named Colt I ever heard of was the man that invented the forty-five!" He looked at the parade. "A nice troop, Dugan?"

"Greatest show on earth—any earth," Dugan pointed to the colorful caravan. "See that cookie on the white horse? That's Josie La Tour."
La Tour was a gay nymph on a white horse. A dozen large balloons, attached to her waist, danced with happiness at being so close to this beautiful woman. White tights revealed her strong, slim form. Flanrin, her husband, rode another prancing steed along side her. He seemed to be talking to her, for his lips moved, but no sound was audible above the loud march music of the band. The girl apparently paid no attention to her husband's words.

Suddenly, there was a loud report. One of the balloons had burst. La Tour's horse reared up, almost unseating the girl, then came down and started forward. It looked like a breakneck runaway! Before the frightened horse could gather headway, Flanrin leaped down and grabbed the white charger. A tragedy was prevented.

"Part of the ballyhoo?" asked Colt.
Dugan shook his head. "Thanks for the compliment, but I ain't that good. That was on the level."
A worried look came to Dugan's face then passed as his Irish good-humor predominated. He slapped Colt on the back.

"I've got to get back to the tent. Come on along and meet some of the boys."
"And miss the parade?" Colt smiled. "I should say not. We'll drop in after lunch."
"Fine. That's a date." Dugan hurried away.

After a quick lunch, Colt and his secretary walked over to the circus grounds. The grounds were alive with activity, as the laborers put up the tents for the big show. Squatting on the ground was the troupe of cannibals dressed in their native garb. They were all gesticulating and talking in high, excited voices. In the center of the group was the witch doctor, Kebbia, a savage with a horrible, black, scarred face and staring white eyeballs.

Colt shuddered as he passed them. He looked over at another act—a shooting act—which was practicing. A man stood up against a wooden board, while a woman traced his figure with revolver bullets.

"That man's got plenty of nerve," said Colt.
"Nerve my eye." It was Dugan. "He's got a bullet-proof jacket."
Colt looked around. "You've got a nice layout here, Dugan."
"It looks all right."

"Let me tell you something, this is the first time since I've been with the show that we'd welcome a Sheriff. There's trouble popping all over the place. It's certainly a lucky break for us that you're in town."
Colt frowned. "Come on, Kelly!"
"What," Dugan pleaded, "Rainey wants to see you. He's got to see you."

Kelly threw up her hands. "There's no balm in Gilead," she said.
Colt looked at the cannibal troupe as they started to walk towards Rainey's wagon. As soon as the savages were aware that they were being watched, they became silent.

"We seem to have interrupted a conference. Who are these people?" Dugan answered tersely, "Cannibals!"
"From Harlem?"
"No, on the level, Mr. Colt, they're the real McCoy. Real cannibals. Believe it or not, there were fourteen cannibals in that troupe last week. There's only thirteen now. 'Thirteen.' He shook his head. "Come on!"

Colt roared with laughter at the implication. He was still laughing when they entered Rainey's wagon. Lovell and Rainey, immersed in gloom, were seated. Dugan made the introductions.

Rainey explained the situation to Colt. "What's the use of a sell-out when you can't give a show," he said.
"What's to prevent you?" asked Colt.

"Well, to begin with—you saw what happened to Miss La Tour at the parade this morning. If her husband hadn't been on the job she might have been killed, or at least crippled."
"But fortunately the accident was averted," said Colt.

Lovell spoke now. "It wasn't an accident. That balloon didn't burst of its own accord."

New Romantic Team With George Arliss In 'King's Vacation'

George Arliss, featured on the screen at the Ritz theatre today and tomorrow in his latest picture for Warner Bros., "The King's Vacation," appears in a role said to be perfectly fitted to his unusual talents, and a story believed to be the finest of all his screen productions. The screen play is a rare combination of humor, dramatic sequences and spectacular scenes, tinged with a delightful romance. It was written especially for Arliss by Ernest Pascal, author of "The Marriage Bed," who also adapted it to the screen in collaboration with Maude E. Howell.

"The King's Vacation" is the story of a man who gave up his wife and child, his happiness in fact, when called unexpectedly to his country's throne and who, when peacefully deposed after eighteen years of pomp and power, leaves his queen consort and returns to the scenes of his earlier happiness. What he finds has taken place there and the changes he observes in the people he knew and loved eighteen years before, give Mr. Arliss a rare opportunity to display his talents for both kindly humor and depth of feeling. His daughter's affair with the ambitious mechanic and his own mature romance with the deserted queen are parallel love stories of unusual charm and power. A new romantic team was launched by Warner Bros. in this picture. The pair are Dick Powell, who recently made such a hit as the crooner in "Blessed Event" and Patricia Ellis, the charming ingenue of the Broadway stage.

Circus Queen

"We figured," added Rainey, "That somebody on the line of march must've thrown a dart or something to explode the balloon. There's no doubt about it—somebody's out to wreck this circus." "What makes you think so," Coit asked. Rainey reached into his coat pocket and took out several sheets of paper. He handed them to Coit. Coit read aloud: "Do not attempt your act tomorrow—or you will die." The words were penciled in capital letters. Coit stared at Rainey's worried face. "Every one of our principal performers has gotten one of these!"

purchasing power. A shell-shocked congress did not have time to read this railroad bill until the announcement was made that a bill is being drafted to give the president authority to control all industry and regulate its output. The combination bill which now includes the original farm bill and the inflation bill gives the president complete control over farming and the monetary system of the country. The railroad bill vests him with control over transportation and the industry bill will give him control of industry.

One would think that these activities and responsibilities would be enough to keep him fairly busy but there is much more to come. Of course, these powers will have to be delegated to others and upon the choice of those representatives the success of the whole program will largely depend. It is surprising to find the leading industrialists admitting that private enterprise is powerless to restore business and endorsing government control. Three years ago these same people would have been horrified at such a suggestion. Many of them now advocate the establishment of a committee similar to the war time committee of national defense with power over practically all business.

That will not be done but the fact that important business men would suggest it shows the trend of the times.

Perhaps the greatest source of anxiety in congress is as to whether or not the president's advisors are submitting a piece-meal program in hopes that the pieces will finally fit together or if they have a well thought out balanced program. The facts so far seem to indicate a lack

NOTICE OF DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP

Notice is hereby given that the partnership lately subsisting between J. M. Speed and Roy Stockard, under which arrangement said parties have been operating the Piggly Wiggly and Hokus-Pokus grocery stores in Midland, Texas, was dissolved by mutual consent and agreement on the 5th day of April, 1933. All debts owing to the said partnership are to be presented to him for payment. Hereafter, the Piggly Wiggly grocery store in Midland, Texas, will be operated under the sole management of J. M. Speed; and the Hokus-Pokus grocery store in Midland, Texas, will be operated under the sole management of Roy Stockard. Dated April 14, 1933. J. M. SPEED ROY STOCKARD. Apr. 26-May 3-10-17 of a cohesive balanced program.

It may be interesting to people on the outside to know that a group commonly called "the brain trust" suggests all this proposed legislation. There are no members of congress in this group and they are never consulted until the measures are submitted.

This group consists of Prof. Raymond Moley, Prof. Texford Tugwell, Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, A. B. Beale, E. A. Goldenweiser and William I. Myers. These men hold official positions in the departments of state, agriculture, the farm board and the RFC. Prof. Moley will head the American delegation to the World's Economic conference, which is to begin in London on June 12.

Probably the most bitter contest of this session will be waged when the president submits his plan for authorization to adjust the war debts and join Europe in a consultative pact to avoid war and secure the reduction of armaments.

This latter proposal is, no doubt, responsible for that vigorous attack launched on congress by William Randolph Hearst. In common with many members of congress he believes that such a course would involve us in all future European wars, including the one which is threatened to break out any day now. The result of the proposed consultative pact in practice would be that in case of threatened war in Europe our government would consult with the nations of Europe and attempt to fix the responsibility on whatever nation or nations were found guilty of acts of aggression.

Having agreed on the guilt of the offending nation we would then be bound to join in such repressive measures as might be necessary to suppress such a nation. These measures would consist of an embargo on the shipment of arms to such a nation and might even go far enough to suspend all commerce or trade relations with it.

This is France's plan of holding Germany in check and while it would be a great force in preventing wars if it could be utilized without international suspicions, under present circumstances, it might hasten the conflict. Many members of congress believe that this is the most dangerous proposal ever suggested to an American congress. However, the president seems assured that the necessary support can be mustered to put it through congress. Ambassador-at-Large Norman Davis, now in London, has already submitted a proposal for suspending all tariff changes until after the conference meets and is evidently breaking ground for a closer affiliation with Europe.

that plans had been completed for Miss Taylor to go to Mexico City this summer to study Spanish dancing and she and Miss McMullan and Bivins will go to New York City to arrange for costumes for the presentation of "Tejas." The music instructor will give programs this summer in various Texas cities, contracts having been closed already for programs at Beaumont and Galveston. Professor Fitz will do solo work and the Misses Taylor, McMullan and Bivins will sing trios.

Fitz was at Lubbock this week and was honor guest at a breakfast reception at the Kuykendall home. He will later give programs at Lubbock. Recently the Midland voice teacher was the principal speaker at a luncheon for the Texas Federated Music clubs at San Antonio, where Miss Bivins sang. Fitz says the Midland girl captivated her audience of expert musicians. He predicts a brilliant career for her.

Fitz will open his studio at San Antonio May 15, and along with his classes will proceed with his plans for production of "Tejas." It is now his plan to give concerts at Texas cities using excerpts taken from "Tejas." These concerts will be followed by presentation of the entire opera by a chorus and ballet of 64 singers made up of the best voices of Texas with likely a few importations from New York City, St. Louis and other cities. Auditions for characters in "Tejas" will begin at the St. Anthony hotel May 15, and rehearsals are to start shortly on the roof garden of that hotel.

Friends of music in Midland expressed regret Wednesday that Midland could not keep Professor Fitz. He is credited with having perhaps done more for genuine music culture and appreciation of finer vocal music in this area of West Texas than was ever before done. He discovered Miss Bivins; he gave to Midland what was universally pronounced the supreme music concert program ever heard in this city, and many times his own voice has been compared by his admirers with the singing of John McCormack.

While in Midland Professor Fitz made a good citizen himself, his friends declare, as well as vitally influencing music. He assisted in programs when asked, took an active part in church music and gave generously of his time and talent to make various types of local programs a success.
