VICAR EXPLAINS CHURCH BELIEFS

In an address Tuesday night by W. H. Martin, vicar of Trinity Episcopal church, Midland, the speaker brought out the distinction and differences between "the two great branches of the Christian church; the Protestant, which in-cludes all of the 216 or more varie-ties of evangelical churches and, in addition, the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States of America," of which he is a missionary priest.

The church, he explained, is called Episcopal because it has three orders in its ministry: bishops, who have the rank that was held by the first apostles; deacons, an order that was made by the apostles, when that was made by the apostles, when the church grew so large that they could no longer minister to the needs of their congregations; and Presbyters, who also assisted in the early as seore of other cities and church is a direct descendant of the Church of England and traces its order of services and its ministry in direct line to the first apostles. There were many bishops in the English church at the time the first Roman missionary bishop, Augustine, was sent by the pope of Rome to England in the early ages of Christianity. THE PEOPLE ORDER

The value of a referendum system, by which voters can lay their hands directly on an issue which their elected represntatives refuse to tackle, is shown by Ohio's experience this fall with an old age pension law.

For years people had tried to put such a law through the state legislature. Time after time the legislators contemptuously snowed it under. The battle went on for sixteen years and each time the law failed.

Finally, this year, fraternal, labor and church groups united to get signatures and have a referendum on the issue. The proposal came to a vote at the recent election -and carried by the overwhelming total of 1,386,107 votes to 526,055.

It is pretty clear that the legislature had been going directly against the strong majority sentiment of the state. But if it had not been for the referendum machinery, the voters would have been utterly helpless.

C passes get quite a few hard knocks from opponents on pass defense who, too often, are out to get the receiver rather than the ball. Of course, illegal interference is promptly penalized when seen by the official, but a penalty will in no way salve the injuries.

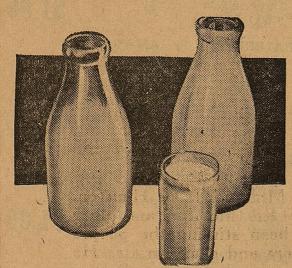

Receivers, therefore, should be taught how to "take it"—how to go up after a pass, get knocked down hard, and still be able to get up.

Relax from the waist up and have the arms and the body soft and liquid. Wrists must be relaxed and the hands and arms should be set, although not tensed, to gather in the ball when it

If knocked down, a relaxed body gets bruised much less quickly than a tensed one. Sketch shows the way to catch a pass.

We can discuss the matter right now."

"No wait!" Lola cried after the departing bell-boy. "I'll go bring them. No, Gifford, wait, wait I'll be right back."

Lola, I know them better than you do."

It was night in Lola's bungalow. Lola paced up and down on the porch. Pops poked his head out of the door. "Now, don't fret so, Lola, Gifford will call."

"It's been hours," said Lola, "I'm worried they'll—"

But the 'phone rang at last, and Lola hurried in to answer it.

"What? . . Oh, yes, yes, right away. Good-bye, Gifford." She hung up, her eyes shining. "They want us all to come over there right now. I knew everything would be all right! Come' let's hurry!"

As they reached the Middleton's rooms in the hotel they stopped in the corridor as Space Hanlon's voice from inside the apartment came to them. He was saying: "And I'll tell you, Mr. and Mrs. Middleton, that's the way it is!"

At his words, Lola's jaw set and she burst into the room without waiting to ring. Her eyes blazed. Scattered about the room were the newspapers of the past few days. Gifford and his parents held other papers in their hands. Space Hanlon stood dramatically in the centre of the room, saying: "And if you don't believe me, why—"

"What's he been telling you about me?" demanded Lola angrily. "Don't believe a word he says, Mrs. Middleton."

"I most assuredly don't," replied right back."

She found Pops and Brother in a corner of the lobby. Pops grasped her arms. "Daughter, daughter, what a nightmare you've given us! Gillette's up in arms. You've a contract. He threatens to sue, and says you'll never get a job at another studio in Hollywood."

"I'm happy to announce that I'm never going to have to work in another studio again," said Lola, calmiv.

"But, daughter, how are we going to live? Such a hasty decision over a little misunderstanding! I'm only insisting for your own happiness!" "I've found my own happiness.
