It is sometimes said that our country has grown too nations. big-that its population is so large and its distances so vast that its people find it almost impossible to unite in one common cause.

At times, perhaps, this is quite true. What arouses the Pacific coast often leaves the middle west cold; what stirs the middle west is apt to be of small interest along the Atlantic. We are a people of diverse interests and, Sam is a chump for sending over more money. occasionally of divided loyalties.

But here is something that is taking hold everywhere. we consider mighty poor collateral. The blue eagle looks out from store and office windows along thousands upon thousands of miles of highways. Everywhere it stands for a mass awakening, a common cause which is appealing to Americans of every section and every class.

It is, in fact, a unifying force of a kind that we have not known since the war; and in its ultimate effects it may be a much more profound thing than any emotion the war brought us.

For the unification of 1917 was a cruel thing, in spots, Odessa. and it was followed by disillusion. We felt ourselves liftand it was followed by distillation. We felt ourselves lift-ed up, but in the let-down that followed we could not help seeing that there had been something just a little spurious about it all. Our ideals got lost sight of too rapidly. We had been brought together, but no one had applied cement to make our new union stick. * * *

What we are getting now is something different. We are getting, at last, a new vision of what a united America could mean; a new realization of the mountains that might be moved if the American people as a whole could recover the faith that is their heritage.

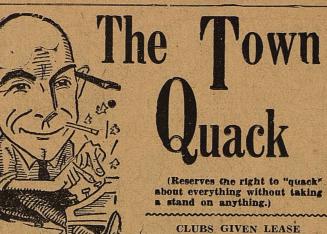

We are engaged in an attempt to recover that faith, in a fight to gain a unity of purpose and outlook that will make up for the spiritual deadness of the post-war years.

It is a dozing giant, this great American people. The signs today indicate that it is about to awaken. When it does there is nothing that will not be possible for it to accomplish.
