BORROWING TO PAY

That delightful air of utter unreality which hangs over most of the war debt discussions seems to be investing the latest phase of it—the renewed effort to get a settlement of the British-American debt.

One of the suggestions, for instance, is that the debt be settled by payment of a lump sum equal to about a tenth of the capital value—something like $360,000,000. But it is added that if this were done, Britain would want to borrow money from the American public to make the payment.

One might inquire, playfully, if such a bond issue would get by under the new federal blue sky law; or one might ask just what the sense is in this business of borrowing money from the left-hand pocket to repay a loan made from the right-hand pocket.

what makes a cigarette taste better

WHAT makes anything taste better? It's what is in it that makes a thing taste better.

CHESTERFIELDS taste better because we buy ripe tobaccos. These ripe tobaccos are aged two and a half years—thirty months. During this time the tobaccos improve—just like wine improves by ageing.

CHESTERFIELDS taste better because they have the right kind of home-grown tobaccos and Turkish Tobaccos "welded together."

We hope this answers your question.

Stars Judge Ideal Traits of Others

HOLLYWOOD (UP)—If you would like to become a movie star, the results of a meeting of Hollywood's 172 best minds may interest you. The meeting was more or less a movie party. During a lull somebody suggested it would be fun to see what the stars thought of each other. Absolutely anonymous, of course, for after all Hollywood is comparatively a small town. In a few minutes 172 lead pencils were pointing down the best characteristics of every star extant, the idea being that the ideal star would be a composite. If you answer the appended descriptions, fame awaits without further ado. Here they are. The "perfect male": Physique, Johnny Weissmuller; hair, Charles Farrell; eyes, William Powell; voice, Leslie Howard; nose, Richard Barthelmess; mouth, Robert Montgomery; dress, Adolphe Menjou; personality, Maurice Chevalier; hands, Warren William; sex appeal, Clark Gable; dancing, Jimmy Cagney; singing, Dick Powell. The "perfect female": Height, Joan Blondell; personality, Mae West; hair, Barbara Stanwyck; eyes, Margaret Lindsay; nose, Gerta Garbo; mouth, Clara Bow; complexion, Ann Dvorak; hands, Tallulah Bankhead; feet, Bette Davis; sex appeal, Jean Harlow; voice, Ruth Catterton, wearing clothes, Lilyan Tashman; dancing, Ruby Keeler; walking, Kay Francis. To repeat, anyone conforming to the above should apply at any studio gate. There will be no wait for an interview. The production executives will yank you in off the sidewalk.

DOUGLAS WINS COWDEN TROPHY FINALS OVER BILL BAILEY

LONG TEE SHOTS; TRUE PITCHES AND PUTTS FIND BAILEY OFF ON HIS GAME; DOUGLAS WINS 9 AND 7

One of those inevitable results that follow the match of two good golfers, one of whom is "hot" and the other "off", was enacted at country club Sunday, when De Lo Douglas beat Bill Bailey over the 36-hole final of the J. Ellis Cowden trophy handicap match tournament. At a presentation during a barbecue beginning at 6 o'clock that afternoon, Douglas was given the trophy, which he will defend next year in the annual playoff of country club golfers, and Bailey was given a runner-up medal.

Hitting his tee shots straight and far all day, except for a brief time during the early morning round, Douglas required only 29 of the 36 holes for winning his match, putting out on Nos. 28 and 29 for pars to win, 9-7. His iron shots were exceptionally true, and his putter was sweet all day.

At the same time, Bailey, who had demonstrated all during the racking elimination rounds that he was headed for the finals with a superior brand of golf, headed for trouble. His brilliant tee shots continued to fall far off the fairways, but his irons wouldn't work and his putter usually caused him embarrassment most of the day.

Douglas was out on the first nine in 42, Bailey 43 (both having a bit of trouble here and there). On the second nine of the morning, Douglas stroked the course in two over par for a 38, Bailey in 43, giving Douglas a score of 80 for the 18. Bailey an 82. Douglas was four up for the morning.

For the afternoon round, Douglas shot the first nine in 39, to put him 7-up, and he won on the 29th, taking a par on the long hole. Bailey shot a 42 on the last round.

Bailey had the advantage of handicap on No. 1, on each round, and Douglas parred it each time only to lose the hole on three of the four times it was played. Some idea of his tee shots may be gathered from the fact that he drove to the edge of the green on No. 8 on both morning rounds. A birdie on No. 2, the longest hole on the course, and hole high on his second shot on No. 1 fairly also helped him at moments when the long-driving Bailey showed flairs of coming back to form.

Bailey's putting really caused him most of his trouble. Ordinarily hard to beat on the greens, he was erratic numerous times Sunday. And at a time when Douglas's putter was stroking the ball true on line

FOOTBALL SKETCHES

BY JESS RODGERS

It is a pity that Midland and Big Spring do not clash this season, for the Bulldogs undoubtedly would make a far better showing than they have made the last two. The Howard county men failed to show more than three men that would compare with some of the minutes turned out by that school in the last two seasons. Cordill, a half, Graves a 150 pound guard, and Flowers, an end, were all that kept the Steers from a far more thorough drubbing Saturday than the 20-0 final clapped on by Pampa.

When we got out to the game Big Spring had the ball down around the Pampa 25-yard line, about as close as the Steers ever got, and thinking the game had just started, we remarked, "Looks like the Steers will win." The minutes turned out by that school in the last two seasons. Cordill, a half, Graves a 150 pound guard, and Flowers, an end, were all that kept the Steers from a far more thorough drubbing Saturday than the 20-0 final clapped on by Pampa.

At first glance at the Big Spring stand revealed that fact that it was jammed full and we were resigned to standing up, when we saw Professor Lackey and four of the local teachers enter, and behind the effective interference run by the well known educator, all had found seats in a few moments. Resolved to show that the Professor also has some of his never give up spirit into some of his ex-students, we managed to shove, scramble, and push our way to the press box when the half was over.

In Stevens, Hamilton and Gregory the Pampa club showed three men that could make any team in this section of the country. In our opinion Stevens could sidestep bulls. In the second quarter he plunged over his own left tackle, cut straight down the line of scrimmage to the other end of the line and then headed for the goal. All he had to do to get there was twist out of the arms of two tackles, stiff arm one and side step the safety man. He was equal to the task, however, and traveled 50 yards for six points. Patton, captain and end of the victors, was in our opinion the sorriest or laziest man that the visitors had. Twice he dropped passes directly bulleted into his arms when these came between him and the goal post, put all distance and did not compare with Owens, the other end.

We noticed in the papers of yesterday that "Buck" Dennis, manager of the baseball team of the Philadelphia Athletics recently was banished from a game for "sassing" an umpire.

Miller's followers declared this was the first time in 20 years of professional baseball that the Vinton man had been ordered from the field.

"Knowing Bing as we do here, we were pretty certain that the decision must have been exceedingly lousy," commented one fan.

for the cup.

Barbecue and beer were served at the stag supper. Earl Whitcomb made a presentation talk that assertedly was analyzed by the Philadelphia chamber of commerce, and Bailey relaxed from the pressure of several weeks' competition by demonstrating Pat Riley's stance on the tee.

Special appreciation was expressed this morning by golfers for a cash donation from Andy Fasken to the barbecue fund.

Mid-noon in Panama. Hot. Sultry. Cloudless sky. The sun like a huge pendant of fire in the heavens. One hundred and ten in the shade, and the only shade behind bamboo blinds in the white cement houses. Panama City. A long business street, deserted but for a few white men and a score of negroes who walked leisurely—a monotonous, dogged pace. Some stopped to gaze in windows. A colored child chewed abstractedly on a stick of sugar cane.

A modern electric sign—blue, modern and ironic—held the blazing sun—read "POP RILEYS." Several persons started through the open door at two swaying couples on the dance floor. A rumba orchestra, in shirt-sleeves, gave out its rhythmic melodies. A beautiful, red-haired girl walked up and down. The girl looked at the two recurring figures for a moment, then stopped, and stared through a half-open doorway into a small room on the side of the cafe. In it was a man placing filled liquor bottles into a burlap bag. He did it hurriedly, nervously.

The girl turned and called, "Pop!" but her voice didn't carry over the noise of the band. She walked quickly towards the party, where an Irishman dozed in a large easy chair. Nearby, sleeping in a hammock, was a younger man. Tall empty glasses were beside both men.

"Yes, but what's all right for him isn't all right for you. You're young. You've got talent. Lots of it. And you ought to be doing something. Not just waiting for another boat to come in. You're too good, Chick to waste time here."

Chick grinned. "Love anybody I know?"

"Sure."

"Pop nodded. "Fine."

Connie smiled. "Want an affidavit?"

"Yeah."

Once again their lips met.

"Get something," asked Chick.

"What?"

"You're sweet."

Connie's lips brushed his ear. "So are you. Sweet and lazy."

A tremendous crowd in Pop Riley's Cafe. The dance floor was filled with gay tourists recently landed from one of the big ships. Men lined the bar.

Pop leaned against the wall in back of the cafe talking to McCluskey, purser of the boat.

"How do you like the crowd?" asked McCluskey.

"Pop dodded. "Fine."

"I'll say it is. I steered the whole ship here this time."

"Nice work," answered Pop, then called to one of the waiters. "Bring me a dozen bottles of the best for Mr. McCluskey here."

"Okay, Pop," said McCluskey, as the waiter went off to fill the order.

Connie walked up to the waiter.

"Well, well," said McCluskey, "how's little Connie Riley?"

"Rollins to you, McCluskey?"

"That's right. Guess I keep forgetting you're married now. So you went for an actor! Well, well. Not telling what the young people will do nowadays, eh Pop?"

Pop grinned. "They'll do as they like. You can depend on that."

"Are you feeling sorry for me?" asked Connie.

"No—no," answered the purser. "But I always thought you'd marry one of the big shots that pass through here."

Connie smirked. "One of the pursers on the boats?"

"You could do worse," said Pop.

"Thanks, I'll try."

"But there's a lot of important people pass through here in the course of a year."

"I don't," said Connie. "See the Purser? Was in the house."

"Not this trip. But there's about a hundred million dollars sitting in here tonight. There's a couple of big oil men over there—and next to them is the head of the biggest radio system in the world."

"Who?" asked Connie.

The old man awoke with a start. The younger one, Chick Rollins, opened his eyes slowly.

"Hello, honey," he said, drowsily.

Connie, the girl, sat on the arm of her father's chair. "I don't want to disturb you hammock athletes, but empty glasses got to be done about that bar-boy."

Pop looked up. "My child, there is only one way for white people to live in the tropics, and that is to observe the customs of the natives."

Connie grimaced. "Yes, I know. But listen, Pop—that boy is robbing you of your eye-teeth."

"And," continued Pop, "one of the most necessary customs in a hot climate is the sista."

"Pop, I'm trying to tell you that boy is stealing all the liquor."

"Now, Connie—a little harmless larceny won't hurt anybody."

Connie was insistent. "Yes, but he's taking it away in truck-loads."

Pop sighed. "Oh, dear me! With all the beautiful world in sight, why must you be talking about human frailties and weaknesses?"

"All right, Pop. Now will you get up?"

The old man rose to his feet with a groan. "Is there any peace anywhere? Do you want me to speak to him?"

"No. Find out what's in that bag and fire him."

Pop shrugged. "I suppose it's easier when you're listening to you." He walked away.

"And tell him," Connie called after him, "you want a partnership when he opens his café. You're stuck in the figure on the hammock."

"And you, Chick," she looked at the smiling face of the man. "I thought you were going to try out that new song."

"Well—I didn't want to interfere with you, baby. I knew you was rehearsing with the band."

"And so you want to sleep."

"What's the rush? We'll put it in for the next show." He smiled and his tone was tender. Honey . . .

"What?"

"Want to do me a big favor?"

"Sure. But why don't you come over and kiss me?"

Chick laughed and stood up. "You're too fast for me, Babe."

"That's not giving me too much."

"One," he said. "You're stuck in the figure."

He took her in his arms and they kissed. He looked down at her pert nose.

"Love anybody in this neighborhood?"

"Uh-huh. Do you?"

"I'm crazy for certain people with red hair."

"Oh, Mr. Rollins, you wouldn't give a girl ideas, would you?"

"Oh—Chick exclaimed with pretended surprise. "Have you got red hair? Well, if the shoe fits, go into your dance."

Connie became suddenly serious. "I wish you would."

"Would what?"

"Chick, honey—when are we gonna snap out of it?"

"Snap out of what?"

"When we get married, didn't we agree that we were going to New York?"

"Sure. But what's the rush?"

"Chick, you can't go on sleeping like this. Why, you're just going to seed."

"Yeah, I know, baby." Chick answered slowly. "Pretty soon."

"But first we've got to get a little dough ahead. Do you want to land in New York broke?"

"Sure."

Chick shook his head and grinned. "Why do you always give the wrong answers?"

"Because they're right, darling."

"Yeah," said Chick, "but let's think this over; this ain't a bad spot. A little excitement when the boats come in—meet a lot of nice people. And no work to do in between. What more do we want?"

"You sound just like Pop."

"Well, your old man's nobody's foot."

Many Mongrels Get Prizes At Newspaper's Dog Show

By HARRY LIVINGSON HAIGHT

We certainly went to the dog show Saturday. Right back of the Scharbauer hotel there was exhibit 4 in the first dog show that we know anything about in the city of Midland, dogs to right of us, dogs to the left of us, dogs in the middle of us and all but dogs right on the top of us. Bull dogs, Pomeranian dogs, shepherd dogs, Boston bull dogs, collie dogs, Spitz dogs, fox terrier dogs, German police dogs, hound dogs, mixed breed dogs and the most intelligent of all dogs, the mongrel, that has no pedigree and that no one loves but the owner.

The most delightful part of the exhibit was the condition of the dogs. Every owner had taken exceptionally good care of his "pooch." They came on foot, in automobiles and in arms. And with the exception of a couple of good fighters that several got mixed in like regular politicians, they behaved as though they liked the party. And in the effort of making a try at it, Midland knows how to pull them. The city came to the scratch, as usual, and its merchants donated prizes, also as usual, and the exhibit, except in spots, was all that could be desired.

Some were a bit miffed because their own Fido did not carry off a prize but there is some consolation in the effort of making a try at it. With a bit more regularity in the management there would have been very little to be corrected and as it stands Midland can be proud of the effort. Two exhibits stood out as both unique and competent. W. I. Pratt, the Nemesis of the tax department, brought down "Sally," his Boston Bull with her six puppies. They made a nice family of eight. Dolores Barron brought "Puff" and her two puppies. These attractions centered much interest.

COMES FOOD VALUE

The United States Labor Department suggests that if the food budget is limited twenty-five to thirty cents out of every dollar expended should go for milk or its equivalent. That is because milk contains practically every element necessary for health. And the milk should, for greatest return, be of the fine, unvarying quality in Scruggs Dairy milk.
