When I typed "Only 11 days 'til Christmas," it's like someone hit me over the head. Although I know the day will soon be here, I'm not ready! I've been so busy at work, that I just don't have the things done at home that I wanted to do this year. I wanted sure am glad to have it off. to make my granddaughter a cute little outfit. I haven't even started on me will take place this Sunday afterthat. I also wanted to make my niece a cute outfit. I have to mail that to Las Vegas, and have I started on that? No! I wanted to get my jelly made, which my nephew looks forward to every year more than anything, and I don't have that done I think I am going to panic! But, I must admit, I have always worked better under pressure.

Where has this month gone? I know my time has gone into the Christmas edition, which will be next week's edition, December 21. I really hope everyone enjoys it. I do enjoy putting it together more than any other paper for the year, although it takes a lot of time, just about the entire month before it comes out.

The highlight of this season for noon, when I take my little Morgan to the Nutcracker ballet. Last year was her first year to attend, and I worried that she might be too young, only 2 years old. But she absolutely loved it. She hasn't forgotten one thing about it. She still talks about the performance and the characters, and recognizes the music. Jeremy said that just the other day, they had the radio tuned to a classical station, and Morgan said, "Daddy, the Nutcracker on the radio." He was so surprised that she could recognize that music. If I sound like I'm bragging a little, I guess that's because I probably am. Oh, well, in my book it's okay to brag about your grandchildren. Don't you

"God Is!"

When a person states that there is no God, that individual must be omnipotent, omniscient and omnipresent. These words mean: "all-powerful, all-knowing and able to be everywhere at the same time." For the one making such a statement, the power he or she may not have may be the power of God. The place where he or she is not may be the place where God is. The knowledge that he or she does not have may be the knowledge of God.

There are some who base their doubt of the existence of God upon the human sensory system. According to this reasoning, we would have to repudiate everything that is not perceptible to our five senses. Who would say, "I have never seen Katmandu at the base of Mount Everest, therefore it doesn't exists?" The answer to that would be, 'Not any one who is capable of rational thought.'

On Christmas Day 1968, our three astronauts circled the dark side of the moon and headed for home. Suddenly over the horizon the moon rose, the blue and white Earth glistening in the light of the Sun and the black void of space. These three well educated men trained in science and technology did not utter Einstein's name. They did not quote the poet, the lyricists or the dramatists. There was only one thing which could capture the thrill of that awe inspiring observation. Millions heard the voice from outer space as the astronaut read it: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." It is the only concept worthy enough to describe that unspeakable awe. "God was filled with holiday cheer when the Do Gooders' Club met for their annual Christmas party Tuesday afternoon, December 5.

Hostesses, Mesdames Mary Jo Calvert, Waydetta Clay and Anna Beth Clay, had Yuletide decorations throughout the building, setting the stage for the festive occasion. Ornaments glittered in a green tree with a colorful array of gifts around it. Garlands, candles, miniature trees, snow and tables laid with red cloths added to the beautiful Christmas decor. The ladies gave each member a Christmas card.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Ellithorp

Couple celebrates 70th wedding anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Ellithorp will celebrate their 70th wedding anniversary on December 16, 2000, at a reception at the First Baptist Church of Killeen, Texas. The reception will be hosted by their son and family. Relatives from around the State of Texas, as well as grandchildren from California and Massachusetts, have plans to attend.

Herman Walter Ellithorp and Ruby Lloyd Grace were married December 6, 1930, in Clovis, New Mexico. Mr. and Mrs. Ellithorp have two grandchildren, 6 great-grandchildren and one great-great grandchild. Although they lived most of their lives in Matador, Texas, they moved in December of 1999 to 517 White Oak Lane, Harker Heights, Texas, to be closer to their son and wife, Arvin and Joy Ellithorp.

mitigated depression when the most that man or beast could hope for was survival. Seeing neighbors and friends experience the same penury did nothing to lessen the anticipation of a little four year-old girl who believed in Santa Clause with all her heart. Her eyes were on the Christmas tree which had been brought from the pasture by a mule-drawn wagon. The decorations were cardboard stars covered in silver foil from chewing gum wrappers and colorful paper chains draping the circumference, but to her it was magical. Holding the tree upright was a cotton-wrapped lard bucket filled with wet sand. In only a few hours there would be an array of toys, candy, fruit and nuts beneath its branches. In her make believe world, the little girl had added to her "want list" daily. Her older brother's letter to Santa was modest, requesting only a football, a red truck and candy. He sensed that all was not well as he caught glimpses of anxiety and worry on the taut faces of his parents. He heard his dad conversing with others about lucky men who found work with the WPA. As shots rang out acress the open, barren fields, the young boy shared a degree of grief with all of his family. An act of mercy. the Government had sent representatives to kill the cows in order to obliterate starvation.

As the bare-footed girl and her brother awoke on the morning of December 25th they scurried across the cold floor to the room where Santa would have read their letters. He would, no doubt, empty the contents of his bag under the tree as evidence of his visit. With an expression of unbelief the children found only two small packages wrapped in crumpled red tissue tied with twine string. The distraught parents watched as small hands clutched a tiny, naked, three-inch celluloid doll and an even smaller red toy truck with wheels that would not turn.

Suddenly the children realized, at least in part, the sacrifice of a mother and dad who must love them without measure. The boy with a humbleness of a grateful heart said "Oh, thank you so much." The four yearold, although not fully comprehending, felt compelled to comfort the two

It had been another year of un- who had given out of their own need and looking into their tearful eyes exclaimed, "Santa didn't bring me much, but that be alright." The flood of emotions that filled the room at that moment had been buried within my soul all these years.

In another place and another time, some 2000 years ago on Christmas morning the scene was even more heart-rendering. A young couple who were expecting their first baby had made a long hard journey hoping to find rest in an inn. They were denied and assigned an odoriferous place among the animals where, without the assistance of a doctor or mid-wife, their infant male child was born.

There was not a tree in the stable to be decorated but suddenly there appeared in the sky a brilliant star hung by God himself. The gifts came later as three men brought the special baby expensive gold, frankincense and myrrh, gifts reserved only

As Mary gazed into the face of her precious child, she surely must have felt her breasts being filled with the natural sustenance that would be his life in the year ahead. Her responsibility was awesome, knowing or not, for in her arms was the one who would bring eternal life to all who would believe in him. One day he would hang on a tree, not as an ornament but as the sacrificial lamb of God. This tree's only a decoration was torn flesh and Holy blood.

Did Mary realize when she held him wrapped in swaddling clothes that she was holding the King of Kings and Lord of Lords? I think not, but I'm sure the more she called him "Jesus," the more it began to sound Unequivocally her revelation had come, when at the wedding at Cana, she spoke to the servants saying, "Whatever he says to you, do it." (Jh. 2:5) No doubt she would say the same to us today as we enter into the most wonderful of all seasons.

"But as many as received him, to them he gave the right to become children of God, even to those who believe in his name, who were born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." (Jh. 1:12,13)

She lived on the Ford ranch east of Matador until ill health forced her to move into town in the late 1990's to be nearer the Methodist Church of which she was a of her own, but her smile glowed in the classrooms and halls of Matador elementary school for many years during her teaching career of 44 years.

Like his father, Lance was a barber, but later became a minister of the gospel, and had two sons who followed in his footsteps. Marion and Bernice married in 1939 and remained in Spur to open Hurst Department Store.

The Fosters took the baby, and she became Grace Wooten Foster Hurst when she married Judge Vance Gilbreath, also a school L.J. Hurst in 1941. Grace and L.J. had six sons and lived in Lorenzo in the 1980's. Marion and his brother, Andy Hurst, Jr., are the surviving members of the Hurst family. TEXAS CROP, WEATHER REPORT

The state's pecan crop is down considerably from last year but the quality is good. The biggest problem has been animals like deer, raccoon, and birds feeding on the trees. When there is a large crop, the amount lost to animals goes unnoticed, but with a small crop, they don't leave much. Stinkbugs have been a problem in tracted to green plants when the weather is dry. The insects feed on the nut during the earlier stages of growth and leave black spots. Because heavy rains have delayed harvesting, pecans are just now appearing on the market. A lot of ice cream and cake sold now uses last year's pecans because they cost less. When choosing pecans, look for nuts that are full, light brown, and without blemishes or black spots. Pecans are one of the oldest crops native to

FREQUENCY OF SUPPLEMENTAL FEEDING

Texas A&M researchers recently reported results of winter feeding on four native range locations of the same weekly total of protein supplement either daily (7X), three times a week (3X), or once a week (1X), compared to unsupplemented controls

(C). Cows in the 7X group received 2 lb/day of cottonweed meal (not cubes) in troughs, so 3X cows got approximately 4.7 lb/feeding and 1X got 14 lb/feeding. Cows in the C group lost more weight and body condition than supplemented cows.

Differences between treatments varied slightly depending on the location. Overall, feeding frequency had little effect except there was considerably more turbulence in feeding behavior and more variation in individual consumption in the 7X group. So, feeding such supplements three times or once a week saves labor and improves feed distribution.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN SCROTAL CIRCUMFERENCE AND PREGNANCY

Colorado workers have studied relationships between scrotal circumference (SC) in bulls and pregnancy rate (PR) in heifer mates. PR generally is reported to be lowly heritable, while SC is highly heritable. Also, SC is related to age at puberty in heifer mates.

But is SC in bulls related to PR in heifer mates? In this study, PR was more highly heritable (about 0.2) than sometimes reported. SC was confirmed to be highly heritable (about 0.75). Unfortunately, the genetic correlation between SC and PR was essentially zero. There was a tendency for low SC to be associated with somewhat lower PR, but high SC was not related to higher PR.

This confirms that SC should be selected as a threshold characteristic (low SC bulls being culled but high SC given no priority) to increase set-tling ability in bulls and decrease age at puberty in heifers. But genetic improvement in pregnancy rate may have to come from direct selection for that trait.

YOU CAN'T CONTROL PRICE, BUT YOU CAN AFFECT IT

"You can't control price." Cowcalf producers often hear that. It is true that the average of all calf prices at any point can not be controlled, or even affected, by any producer. However, relative price is affected by genetics, management, and marketing. Recent Texas SPA summaries compare high profit and low profit pro-

Calves sold by high profit producers averaged 50 lb. heavier, $8.16/cwt higher, and $75.93 more gross calf value per cow bred. (Also, break even calf price was about $56/cwt for high profit and $122 for low).

High profit producers had slightly higher weaned calf crop percent, accounting for only about $6 of the gross difference. Of the remaining $70, about half was due to weight and half to price. You can affect rela-

by Agriculture Commissioner SUSAN COMBS

Texas shares more with Mexico than common border. Trade with our southern neighbor has been booming since the signing of the North American Free Trade Agreement, and we'll continue to have a prosperous two-way relationship with new Mexican leadership taking office

But while major headway has been made, there are still glitches to tackle. Border infrastructure problems have long slowed deliveries in both directions, and we need new innovative facilities to help us overcome some of them.

A new producer-owned truck-to-truck transfer station was unveiled in Rio ed to help Texas producers deliver their grain directly to buyers in Northern Mexico. The new transportation system will allow Mexican transport trucks to cross the border on privately maintained roads. The trucks will then go to the transfer station to pick up deliveries from U.S. trucks transporting Texas grain shipments.

Food and agricultural trade between the United States and Mexico has more than doubled during the last 10 years and is expected to total $10.9 billion in fiscal year 2000. Mexico is now our nation's fourth-largest export market for farm
