A Birthday Party

Mrs. D. L. Wilkerson was hostess to the lot of the little folks and their mothers and friends last Friday afternoon in honor of her little daughter Cherri's birthday last evening. MissesHamlet Wallace and Grace Moore assisted the little folks with their games while Mrs. Wilkerson entertained the mothers in another room. The first game was one in which everyone guessed the names of various persons from the little letter cutouts of the word Charlie. Mrs. W. E. McRae was the principal player in this game and won the prize for the best guess. The second game was a memorial game of dolls and was presented to the little ones by Mrs. F. H. McRae. There were no prizes but since the McRae family had the best time the prize for the best guess was awarded another nice prize.

The games were then followed by the closing words when the large birthday cake with three candles held the center of the table. Delight was written on the cake and was the last word of the games and the last word of the party.

The next item on the program was the presentation of gifts and was unopened by the gifts, the presents being crate for the little girls and toys for the little boys. The presents included a cake with a silver tiara for the young lady and a toy for the younger sister. The children were very happy and were very happy to have their presents given to them.

A straiegeeling was introduced in a number of quiet poems, the terrace girls being so displayed, no one very pretty of the songs was heard.

The evening was well attended and the boys were in great demand.

CHAPTER 3

The little people

I looked up from my book, a novel I had been reading, and there in the corner of the room, near the window, I saw a small figure. It was a little girl, maybe five or six years old, with curly hair and bright eyes. She was sitting quietly on the floor, watching me read.

I put down my book and asked, "What are you doing here?"

"I live here," she replied, "I am a little person." I was surprised and curious, so I asked her more questions. She told me that she was a member of a secret society, and that she lived in the walls of the house.

I was shocked, but also intrigued, and I asked her more about their society. She told me about their meetings and their beliefs, and I was amazed by the depth of their knowledge and the complexity of their ideas.

I asked her if they were real, and she nodded yes, "We are real," she said, "but we are invisible." I was fascinated by the thought of a secret world living in plain sight, and I asked her how she could accomplish such wonders.

She smiled and said, "We have magical powers," and I was again amazed by the incredible things this little girl was telling me.

I asked her if she could show me something, and she led me to a small door in the wall. I opened it and saw a whole new world, a place of wonder and magic. I was in awe of the little people and their hidden society, and I knew I would never forget the experience.

Over Fifty years ago a young physician practiced widely in a large district and became a regular favorite of the people. This was Dr. Orson, who, although very popular, lived a life of simplicity and modesty. He was known for his kind and gentle nature, and for the great care he took with his patients.

The doctor's practice was simple and effective. He believed in treating the whole person, not just the disease. He took the time to listen to his patients and understand their concerns, and he always did his best to make them feel comfortable.

One day, a young girl came to Dr. Orson's office with a severe cold. She was coughing and sneezing, and she could hardly breathe. Dr. Orson knew exactly what to do. He gave her some medicine and some warm tea, and he told her to rest for a few days.

The girl got much better, and she was grateful to Dr. Orson for his care. She returned to his office a few days later, and she thanked him again for his kindness.

Dr. Orson was always willing to help others, and he was admired by all who knew him. He was a true doctor, and his legacy lives on to this day.

IDLE DOLLARS

In every community there are thousands of idle and unproductive dollars. Idle dollars may represent private wealth, but they have no value to the owners nor the community until they are put in motion.

Today there is a pleasant and profitable job for every dollar in the hand. Homes are needed—homes which will make better citizens, better neighbors, a better town—homes which will contribute indeft-ibly to the welfare of every man, woman and child in the community.

Loans for home-building are good investments. You can select your loan and keep in close touch with it. See us for further information.

"Dodge Brothers management too no expense to us," said Carter-White Motor Company. "In fact it is only a manifestation of Dodge Brother's business policy. We can keep our prices as they have always been. We are certain of their success in the future."
