TRAIL DUST

By DOUGLAS MEADOR
These cameos of tragedy that life carves recklessly and sometimes with the zest of a mad artist, are so stark and poignant as to make the heart cringe and ache. Nature often wears them boldly on her white waist in the glare of a laughing sun. It is difficult to understand how a man can smile so honestly, when he must always look at the stubs of his legs ending above the knees, and it is strange to find in that remnant of a body, eyes so clear and hopeful and a voice soft and sincere. There was no bitterness in his face when his small, blind son sat down beside him and stretched two chubby little legs out on the hard cement. He patted a small hand tenderly and stooped over to tie a tiny shoe. Perhaps there is no connection in thought, but not very far away stood a wealthy man who has two good legs, a good home and a healthy family, disgruntled and complaining because he is not making more money.

The compromising likes are blooming again, while the enchantment of Texas awaits with abated breath for the strong hands of spring to begin pulling on the curtain ropes. The present is very old but so perfect that its original conception that the world has had desire for an improvement has had desire for an improvement. His Perfecter planned in its fierce beauty, the strength of hope for the young and the tenderness of memories for the old. For those in love he built selected lodges high in the gallery of clouds and lined them with silver satin.

Like the crack of a whip the sandstorm hits and bends the begging mesquite trees to the churning earth. The bright sun becomes invisible and an old man stumbles, high in the grilly fog, with a yellow lantern. Two blades flutter from the convulsing wheel of a windmill, to rattle against the pebbled terrain. Something greater than mortal terror roars in the sky, the mighty shifting of the earth, rebelling against the rough, hard hand of wind. The sun dips lower and shadows are torn by the torrents of dust. A jagged, frigid edge comes to the wind and an awe-inspiring shudder creeps into the silence about firesides. Darkness brings no relief except from the sickly yellow of the last sun. A window rattles and the storm grows between its teeth. The sandstorm, monarch of the invisible forces, electrifies the world. It touches and sifts fine ashes from the past, upon the puny temples of the living. It burns the dreams of mankind, as great dead trees before the lance of flames in a doomed forest. It sucks the blood of moisture from the hurt soil, as a giant vampire with vengeance cankered about a black heart. At that moment when hope clings prayerfully on the cliff above oblivion and hot dust rises in the waterholes on the ranges, the fire in the wind is quelled and a soft breeze heals creation.

The cushioned sandals of opportunity have moved away from my feet many times and left no trace in the dust. Some strange mockery of the fates seems to rejoice in showing me the imprints of long knuckles on the door-sill. After the caller has departed, made while I searched a barren cupboard for syrup to soothe a teething spirit. Somehow, I have always expected the stranger to go in and kindle a fire while awaiting my return, or at least to leave a telephone number. Yet at times I have pressed an ear to the plain panel in hopes of hearing one faint stir, and finally opened the door in desperation only to find the void of old dreams, as a neighbor returning a borrowed magazine, there.

If just one more person takes the liberty of telling my wife that the picture on a current magazine cover is her likeness, I will undoubtedly have to remove my shoes before I can enter her presence, or, perhaps walk before and scatter rose petals in her path. I have noticed that about the time the illusions of marriage reach the state of understanding, where peace and comfort are in the offing, a certain type of fiend delights in stirring the placid pool by wading through with flattery. Nothing could be more damaging, since the book states that marriage is not aided by retrospect.

ONLY 350 CARS REGISTERED AS TWO DAYS LEFT

Less Than One Third 1934 Registration

With only two more days remaining in which Motley county motor vehicle owners may secure license without penalty, less than 350 of the 1100 owners who purchased tags last year have applied for the 1935 license. Miss Rachel Patton, deputy clerk of the Sheriff's office declared yesterday.

Some of the delay in purchasing plates is attributed to the confusing laws applying to the attached, when the tags might be attached, the law later being supplanted by a ruling that the license could be attached as soon as purchased.

Miss Patton said it would be impossible to accommodate all customers in the remaining time should they apply within the next two days. It will be illegal to operate motor vehicles on the highways with a 1934 license after midnight Sunday March 31.

MILLION DOLLAR COTTON LOSS IN 1934'S DROUGHT

Over 17,000 Bales Short Of 1933 Crop

Motley county lost over one million dollars in cash through the drought of 1934, when the final cotton report for the past season is compared with the crop of 1933 and the shortage of 17,146 bales is valued at $60, per bale.

While the comparison is misleading inasmuch as the 1935 crop was in excess of the average, and the 88 per cent loss in the 1934 crop also includes the acreage reduction for the county, it is safe to estimate that the drought cost Motley county cattlemen and farmers far in excess of one million dollars.

Final Report

The final cotton report as received from Horace J. Marler of Floret, Special Agent, shows that there were 2,271 bales of cotton, counting round as half bales ginned and to be ginned in Motley County from the crop of 1934 as compared with 19,417 bales from the crop of 1933.

according to E. M. Ragenbrecht, Extension swine husbandman. Thirty-three thousand applications have been signed to date and more will be signed before the closing date April 1. of this number, 3,000 of the 1935 signers did not take part in the 1934 program Ragenbrecht said.
Young county has completed tabulating and adjusting final contracts. These contracts are now before the State Review Board for final checking and will then be sent to Washington. Young county is the first county in the State to reach the Review Board.
Disbursement of the third and final instalment of benefit payments due under the 1934 corn-hog contracts began last week. Claude R. Wickard, chief of the corn-hog section in Washington, has announced. A total of $905,810.22 was disbursed in the first set of checks sent out.
The balance of the final payment of approximately $80,000,000 representing the last two-fifths of the total hog adjustment payment will be distributed as rapidly as possible, Mr. Wickard said. He pointed out, however, that before final payment can be made to a producer, his pro rata share of the local administrative expenses pertaining to the hog part of the contract must be deducted.
"Therefore the speed with which checks can be sent to a county will depend upon the receipt of the certifications of total administrative expenses from the county control association. Benefit payment checks cannot be issued until these expense certifications are received and audited," he said.

all students and their grades listed. Fifteen students earned honor grades in five or six subjects, the full course allowed. HOLLYWOOD By Marshall Fiske Publisher's note: This column is written especially for the Matador Tribune, and represents accurate information from the world's film capitol.

Comments of any nature will be appreciated by the author, whose address is 1122 N. Edgemont Ave., Hollywood, California.
On the stages in Hollywood one sees many things and places represented, which in real life, lie thousands of miles apart and removed by many years in time.
For instance, I saw huddled together, cheek by jowl, a desert isle with a wrecked ship lying on the strand, nearby, a lady's boudoir in France during the time of Louis XIV, a Chinese mandarin's home in Manchuria, a stable situated on a farm in Iowa, a courtyard of a monastery in Mexico, a scene supposed to represent Hades with flames and devils in evidence, a Turkish bath house, etc.
Working in pictures broadens one's mind. We find ourselves in many places and circumstances that our short life on earth would be unable to furnish us.

MATADOR High School

ADULTS 25c CHILDREN AND STUDENTS 15c

Rain in Southern California is only seen a few months of the year. Sometimes nine months pass by and nary a drop do we see. We like a dark, over-cast day at times, it is a positive relief from the constant sunshine. It is hard for others to understand that, but it is a fact, nevertheless, that one can be surfeited with too much sunshine. The patter on the roof, just as one is about to fall to sleep what music could be sweeter or more soothing. Rain at twilight makes one introspective - it produces a mood. It is then one turns his thoughts to the mystery of life. Why are we here? (to improve ourselves to prepare ourselves for a future existence?) where did we come from? (did we live previously in other incarnations?) and where are we going? (to live on a plane of existence where where sorrow is unknown?) We switch on the lights, presto, this mood is dispelled and we are called back from our musings to face the realities of this prosaic world with its petty harpings and bickerings.

The Academy of Motion Pictures awarded "It Happened One Night" the bronze statuette for the finest picture of last year. It was a very successful picture from the point of box-office attraction-it appealed to the great masses who could appreciate it. But the picture lacked substance - it was more fluff. "Abie's Irish Rose" beat the world's record - it ran over six years in New York City, it was not a really fine show at all, merely a hokum, but it appealed to the great masses. Hence, its phenomenal run. Fine discrimination of things really worthwhile, has never been the forte of the masses.

A young struggling actor with a handsome profile-a la Barrymore-and a soul just bursting with ambition, is living in what he calls a "dog-house". It was formerly Jackie Coogan's playhouse destined to give temporary shelter to who knows, what rising young star of the future.

If you will look sharply at a forthcoming picture you will see Helen Hayes seated on a divan with others amidst palms. If you did not know the difference, you would never guess that she harbors within herself very great emotional acting ability. She looks neither better nor worse than all the other mere atmosphere players, who if they only had a chance, might outshine a Bernhard - or a Duse. Life has many surprises reserved for us under ordinary exteriors.

THERE is no way to compare the Ford V-8 with any other car because there is no other car like it.

The Ford enables you to step up into the fine-car class in performance, beauty, comfort and safety. But there is no stepping up in price. That is kept down by Ford low-profit policies and unique manufacturing methods. These are as different as the car itself.

It takes eight cylinders to give the modern performance you need these days. The Ford is powered by a V-8—the finest type of eight-cylinder engine. You have to pay more than $2000 for that in any other car.
