WEEK A COMMUNITY NEWS-PAPER?

Theodore Roosevelt was once asked, during a friendly discussion of relative value, to name three things which he would consider most essential to his welfare should he be marooned on an uninhabited island. His answer was most significant when he said:

"First, I would most desire my rifle. Second my hometown newspaper. Third, my gun."

It is interesting to note that his hometown newspaper is the most important thing he mentioned and it is strange that a newspaper's perception of values should make this choice. The community newspaper is essentially a serial history and biography, combined, of the people and events in the territory which it serves. Through its succeeding volumes the community's progress — or retrogression — is unconsciously portrayed. It makes its subscribers problems its own problem: a sympathetic understanding exists between publisher and subscriber which is entirely absent in urban publications. This spirit of fraternalism extends to closer relationships between the advertiser in the home-town paper and those whom the advertiser serves. His appeal is not so much one of "better bargains" and "cut prices" as it is of friendship, constructive community association. His advertisements are a message from one friend to another.

It is the function of the community newspaper to direct and to further the cultural, educational and spiritual life of its community, in addition to the dissemination of news. It holds as a sacred obligation the furtherance of all projects designed for public benefit, and it opposes with equal determination that which is detrimental. It is the clearing-house for opinions expressed by expert and reader, alike. The community newspaper occupies a traditional place in the existence of its home town parallel in importance to the school and the church. It is an integral part of the realization of pioneering effort to constructive living. The mouth-piece of an enterprising and progressive element of national life. The spirit of neighborliness is engendered by the familiarity with which it treats its family of readers; its flexible editorial policies permit of the same reportorial treatment of Bill Jones' cow as is given to news of world-wide importance. And the same fine editorial discrimination compels the absence of news in its columns which directs unfavorable attention to a member of its circle.

By close adherence to a policy which is dictated by a philosophy peculiar to rural society, the community newspaper has come to be regarded as an indispensable part of the rural civic plan. Its subscribers enjoy a sense of proprietorship, a feeling which is shared by the average home-town editor. It is the tie which binds the common interest of John Brown, who operates the corner store, with that of Jim White, who maintains a fine herd of Jersey on his farm three miles south of town. By its influence the community spirit of interdependence is promoted, intimate news is made available to those removed from childhood associations, and through its sympathetic knowledge of community affairs it has become a vital necessity to all community programs of progress.

Your community newspaper needs you—you need your community newspaper!

There is a glamour about certain cities that make them alluring. And it is only this glamour that people associate with them that constitute their sole attraction. But alas, there is a seamy side that only those who reside there have discovered. London, Paris, Rome, Venice—just to mention a few of them. Take Venice, for example. There is no city like it in the whole world. In the moonlight, on the Grand Canal, as you drift lazily along in your gondola, with its gondolier singing "O Sole Mio," with the Venetian palaces rising out of the waves—all this casts a magic spell upon the soul of the sensitive person. It is lyric in its beauty, at such times, is Venice. Then when you return from your ride and enter cafes, hotels you see many rich and distinguished looking people about, the ladies with bare arms and flashing white shoulders, ablaze with diamonds—all in joyous animation music, laughter, gay banter. This is glamorous Venice. The next morning, we will say, you take a walk and visit sections of Venice: the average tourist never sees. By the uncompromising light of day, when there is no moon to lend its silvery beauty to the scene, what do you see? Drab filthiness—slimy water-wreathed hovels, at the door ways their children heads in their laps looking for lice. And the smell! You pass one place and the odor of garlic and dead fish comes to you, nearby the smell changes to the odor of raw hides, further on your olfactory nerves conveys the smell of rotten eggs. You stagger back to your hotel—to you it seems like Dante's excursion into the nether regions. Yet this is also Venice, the Glorious Queen of the Adriatic—that has not been publicized. Then when you near your hotel near the Piazzetta, you see the tourists feeding the famous pigeons of St. Mark's, when you see the beautiful Palace of the Doges looming up with its adjacent oriental looking church (St. Mark's) when you see the brilliant cafes and shops and hotels, then the experience you had in the early morning hours seems to you like a bad dream—like a nightmare you are glad to know was only a dream upon awakening.

If people would or could only realize the seamy side of Hollywood, many would think twice before embarking for our shores. But the beautiful golden siren beckons and you forget all else in your wild delirium. Everybody in Hollywood is not rich and world-famous by any manner of means. But the magazines only exploit these and ignore the rest. Thousands here are on the very verge of starvation—discouraged, disillusioned, old, ill, harassed by sleepless nights of worry, tortured by the hideous actuality of their impoverished circumstances. The future looks dark and gloomy to them, yet they too live in and are of Hollywood. Only those who have lived here for years and who are well acquainted know the many tales of woe that pour into their ears of this one and that. Only the other day a young and very distinguished looking actress (a Vassar girl who had also taken summer work at Columbia) told me she had seriously thought of committing suicide. She had written a number of one-act and two-act plays but she was unable to get them placed. For weeks she did not get one day's work, and creditor were pressing her on all sides, her debts were mounting steadily, yet she was young. And with the old it is still worse. Their services are no longer wanted, they are passe, yet they continue living with mounting expenses that threaten to engulf them. And when illness comes to the old and poor it seems as if they had arrived at the very nadir of existence. Yet they too, live in world-famous Hollywood. Parents are here who have mortgaged their homes, their farms, to get money enough to come to Hollywood with their children because so many in their small home town had told them their Johnny and their little Gwendolyn would be a "knock-out in pictures." Then when they have exhausted their money, what then? There are many who have been victimized by swindlers. Smooth, oily-talking flatterers have persuaded them to come here and that their children would be started. Then after these swindlers get all the money away from them, and yet no stardom is in sight, what then? Tears, sadder and much wiser, they are ashamed to return home and be a laughing stock for the rest of their lives. One young widow told me but recently, "Oh, what a fool, I was to listen to that swindler. When I left X—(her home town) most all of my friends were at the station to see me off. It was in the papers and an announcement was made from a station here by radio, and even our pictures were taken with me and my child on the back of the train platform. Since then I have received letters from my friends back home wondering why they had never seen my little daughter on the screen. I lied to them, told them there was a delay, anything but the truth, that I had been an awful sucker and a fool." And thus it goes on and on, these tales of disappointment, disillusionment and worse.

By nature, I am a realist, rather the cynic, how I think the Hollywood should have the attention of people know or realize this, will be much unhappier here. If only this, will be my warning has some have profiting saving themselves trouble through of others.

MOVIE CHATTER

By A. Rogue

Well sir, it's been a good little while since we have had a good western, so I just guess that we better have another one this week-end, and since we have to have it, it's going to be another Vitagraph picture, starring John Wayne, entitled "The Man From Monterey."

This story is set down among the chili-destroycers in old Mexico, where the six guns roar and the long knives flash; there's a lot of romance, suspense, action and drama packed into this seemingly ordinary little western; and believe you me here will be one picture that will really be well recorded—Vitagraph knows their stuff.

The last two Sundays the pictures we have offered have not been just what they should have been, the cast is seems very, very good, but there just wasn't enough story. Sunday and Monday I think we will have one that will come up to all your expectations, and that's "George White's Scandals," and its the same production of George White's that ran of Broadway in New York City for two years that has recently been set to celluloid. The cast in this picture is made up of Rudy Vallee, Jimmy (Schnozzle)

Durante, Alice Faye, Adrienne Ames and George White himself. The reports give this show just "everything that a good show needs, this picture has." Its a peppy little musical with lots of wisecracks; and that's what Matador likes—it's George White's "Scandals" Sunday and Monday.
