A friend who is a victim of the monetary epidemic of being cramped for funds, says if things don't start picking up, he may be forced to start picking up things.

Life requires us to take chances, and as in every game there is no positive assurance of winning. The positive assurance of not winning is to refuse to take a chance.

Another source of employment might be the government's pool of replacements for West Texas weather forecasters.

They are at it again. The garden seed and flower seed packages are beginning to cause unrest among the people. It seems about time that someone started a Flower Seed Anonymous to protect the weak from the beautiful packages and that urge to try just one more time.

Another advantage of a buggy was the privilege of using it without a license. And 15c worth of axle grease would last two years. Of course, you couldn't travel far, but again there weren't so many hills to see the other side of.

Federal Funds Sought to Remodel And to Re-Equip Stanley Building

No Taxes With Revenue Bonds

LONG-AWAITED report of the Motley County Hospital Board met with favorable public reception in the District Court room Thursday afternoon. John V. Stevens, chairman of the board, answered the questions before they were asked.

A "Public Affairs" program by El Progreso Study Club, which had been scheduled as a symposium on the proposed county hospital, was made open to the public because of the general interest.

Stevens was introduced by Mrs. Robert Darsey, President of the club. The program was directed by Mrs. W. F. McCaghren, chairman of Public Affairs and Miss Sue Glenn served as moderator.

The courtroom was about two-thirds filled, predominately with women.

Stevens traced the history of the Motley County Hospital Board appointed by the Commissioners Court after voters in April 1966, had balloted 438 to 123 favoring the hospital district. Other members of the board are J. M. Hill, Farris Fish, Calvin Franks of Flomot and Newton Fletcher of Roaring Springs.

The program had been listed as a "city-county" hospital, an error which Stevens immediately corrected.

"The city has no part in this plan," he declared, "this is a county hospital and embraces an area beyond the county."

"We have been accused of withholding information," Stevens said, "and it is true. We were charged with the authority and the responsibility of making possible hospital facilities for Motley County and the surrounding area. We had the authority to impose taxes to build a new hospital."

"We are all property-owners and tax-payers. We wanted the best facilities possible but we did not want to impose a tax burden on ourselves and our children for the next 40 years, without assurance that we would have the protection of doctors and hospital use."

"We studied other areas which had built hospitals (some spending from half a million to several times that amount) but are still without doctors. The tax burden of these hospitals rests on the property owners."

"We learned that the federal Hill-Burton money was extremely complicated and that it would be 1970 before our application could be considered. Then we learned of another government source of money."

Have Commitments

"We had previously secured commitments from Dr. A. C. Traweck Jr. and Dr. J. S. Stanley, as to their future plans and what they wanted for their properties. Both hospitals here had ceased to operate at that time."

"We secured an inspection from the state hospital licensing bureau. The inspector approved the Stanley Hospital if remodeled and new equipment installed. It would provide an 11-room hospital.

HOME FROM HOSPITAL

Ronald Davenport returned home recently from Mangum, Okla., where he had been a medical patient in the hospital. He is convalescing at his home here.

"We had decided to make no public statement until we could present a plan and financing arrangements to the people. We felt that with so many conflicting proposals and diversion of opinions, we could only further complicate the situation until we had something to offer. We were being assailed from all sides, and many people felt that we were not doing anything. We made many trips. We inspected other cities which had hospital facilities. We investigated financing plans.

Use Of Revenue Bonds

"We learned that it was possible to finance a hospital with government revenue bonds. If we could secure approval it would not be necessary to hold an election and property would not secure the loan. It must be paid from revenue alone from the hospital."

"We were once assured the money but much time elapsed. Finally on December 17 three of us went to Ft. Worth and met with the agency. Once they told us we did not need a hospital, but we did not give up. They finally promised the loan if our application meets their requirements. With Medicare the survey and applications is extremely complicated."

"We have been promised the money. We have no assurance we will get it and we have no assurance we can secure doctors and nurses. At least we will have as good a chance as other towns, many of which have voted large bond issues upon themselves."

City Cooperation

Mayor Welling said the city had no funds, but that every possible aid would be rendered with regards to water, sewer and paving facilities.

Pharmacist Bob Stanley said as a businessman, a hospital would help his business, but that it would also help every business in town, including stores, filling stations, motels and cafes. He said his records showed prescriptions from as many as ten counties when the hospitals were in operation.

Gordon Russell Helping

County Judge Forrest Campbell said the hospital board is an autonomous body and that the Commissioners Court has no authority over its actions. He said, however, he had worked closely with the board when asked, since coming into office.

"We learned that Gordon Russell of Hale Center (son of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Russell of Matador) was the best qualified person in West Texas to prepare the survey and make the application," Judge Campbell explained, "and he is doing the work for us without charge, except cost of secretary and telephone calls."

Cooperation Atmosphere

The atmosphere of the courtroom was soon one of complete cooperation. Various groups praised the hospital board as five sincere and dedicated men who had given of their time and efforts in support of the responsibility placed in their hands. El Progreso Club officials inquired of ways their organization might be of service.

It was expected that many questions might be asked at the close of the program. County Attorney Howard Traweck asked the amount of the revenue bond issue.

"$170,000" was the immediate reply, "and that would include operating funds estimated for six months. We would have a hospital as functional as a new one."

Mrs. W. F. Jacobs asked regarding the training of Licensed Vocational Nurses, which was completely answered by Judge Campbell.

Rev. John Fitzgerrel asked how the board estimated the number of patients which might use the hospital. Stevens answered him immediately by declaring that records were available of the number of patients coming here when the two hospitals were in operation.

"I know there are more questions out there," Stevens said. "I want to answer them here and not on the street." But there were no more questions and the meeting was adjourned.

Electricity and safety occupied the minds of the fourth grade students after a lesson on the subjects from Mr. Freddy Wellington and Mr. James Price.

The two electricians, who are employed by West Texas Utilities, explained facts about electricity along with the safety that is necessary in handling it. They also spoke on the West Texas

Utilities being owned by the people. After the lectures there was a question period, followed by demonstrations.

For most of man's history the earth has been considered the center of the universe, with the moon, sun, planets, and stars revolving around it. For a great deal of this time the earth was considered flat.

Many early Greeks perceived that the earth was round, but after the fall of the Roman empire it was left to courageous men of the Renaissance to make the assumptions which have led to present knowledge of the universe.

COUNTY AGENT PALLMEYER SAYS:

Seeding of small grain crops—wheat, oats, or barley—during the spring months is not recommended, unless the fall-sown crop is winterkilled or lost due to insects.

Wheat, oats and barley varieties, seeded in the spring, have yielded much less in all trials conducted over many years by field units of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Spring seeded crops usually yield less and grain quality is lower because they must become established during the period of low winter and spring rainfall. They usually are late maturing and may be damaged by rusts, hot weather and winds during the fruiting period. Also, the returns from winter grazing are lost.

Spring seeding of grain must be made from Feb. 15 to March 15 in Motley County, and this is normally a period of low rainfall. Average rainfall for Jan., Feb., and March is less than 1 inch per month, and is also a period of high winds, cold fronts and late freezes which may damage the young crop. This year, moisture is an exception, and as much of the winter wheat has been lost, oats offer a possibility, if they can be seeded before long.

Hard red spring wheat varieties tested under dryland conditions for four years at Bushland averaged only 6.8 bu./ac compared to 22.4 bu./ac for winter wheat grown during the same years. Under irrigation, spring wheat averaged 21.6 bushels compared to 36.7 bushels for winter wheat. At Chillicothe, spring wheat averaged only 3.6 bu./ac compared to 20.5 bu./ac for winter wheat for the same 5 year period. Spring own oats and barley likewise have yielded less than the same crops fall seeded. With oats and barley, the same varieties can be compared from fall and spring seeding. At Denton, the 28-year average yield of New Nortex oats was 61.8 bu. from fall seeding and 42.9 bu. from spring seeding. At Chillicothe, fall seeded New Nortex averaged 36.3 bu. and 13 bushels from spring seeding. Under irrigation at Bushland, on the other hand, fall and spring seeded New Nortex yielded exactly the same.

SCOUT FATHERS, SONS, AND LEADERS—Among those attending the 31st annual Father-Son Banquet held February 20, were three Scoutmasters, two of whom are fathers who attended with their sons. At left is Scoutmaster and Mayor Freddie Welling and his son Frank, and at right is Scoutmaster C. L. Hacker Jr., and his son, Rickey Otis Hines, also a Scoutmaster in center. The annual affair is sponsored by the Matador Lions Club. It was begun by the late Lt. Paul Eubank, who lost his life in the Pacific during World War II. —Tribune photo

Fall seeded Cordova barley at Denton averaged 4.7 bu./ac compared to 29.5 bu./ac for spring seeding over a 11 year test. At Bushland, fall seeded Wintex averaged 37.7 bushels compared to 20.3 bu. for spring seeding.

When moisture conditions are favorable, and the crop has been lost, spring seeded grain crops occasionally produce good crops. Under most conditions, grain sorghum, guar or other spring crops are more satisfactory, however.

Before long you will see pellets for sale to be used for insect control, disease control and weed control. All you have to do is drop one of these containers in 5 gallons of water, and mixing will be complete. You won't even have to remove the paper wrapper from the material as it dissolves in the water. Should you use them or not?

These pellets will sell for about $1.98 and will prepare a 5 gallon mixture. By comparison, 2, 4-D sells for about $1.69 a pint, and which do you prefer. Less work on your part in the preparation of the spray material, or less cost per gallon of spray material?

Mixtures for insect control and disease control prices were not figured, but should be about the same proportion as for the weed control mixture.

Copper is another micronutrient needed in plant growth. Only 100 parts of copper are needed where 1,000,000 parts of Nitrogen are needed, and too much copper can become toxic to plants.

Copper is used in the oxidation-reduction system of plants, and in certain enzyme systems. S m a 11 grains, vegetable crops, fruit and nut trees are the most susceptible crops and deficiencies are indicated by the following:

Upper terminal part of plants wilt; young leaves are chlorotic near the base, and tips burn; small grains have twisted leaves, and tips die. In one field where a copper deficiency was evident, plants under an electric line received enough copper from the rainfall coming into contact with the copper lines to correct the deficiency.

Copper will build up where Bordeaux sprays are used, and continued regular applications can build this amount up to the toxic point. If copper is determined to be deficient, Foliar sprays may be used, as well as chelates.

IN APPRECIATION

May we take this means of expressing our sincere appreciation and to say Thank You to all our friends and neighbors who have been so kind since the burning of our home, February 15. For all the telephone calls, offering to help us and the food brought in the day of the fire, we offer another Thank You. And last, we want to Thank You many times over for all the clothing, linens, and household goods of any kind that you have so generously given us. May the Lord richly bless each of you.
