were not taxable due to credits and deductions allowable.

As a result of the lowering of exemptions, many more persons are now subject to the Federal income tax than before, and for the calendar year 1942 it is estimated that more than 35 million persons will file Federal income tax returns. To the large number of persons now subject to the Federal income tax, who have never reported income before for Federal tax purposes, an understanding of the law and applicable regulations is of prime importance.

An income tax return is a declaration on the part of the taxpayer of his total taxable income for the year, together with the various deductions, exemptions, and credits to which he is entitled. It is in reliance upon voluntary disclosure, and the integrity of taxpayers generally, that the cost of administration of the income tax can be kept at a minimum. Though the return is a voluntary statement, any person who willfully makes a return which he does not believe to be true and correct in every material matter is subject to the penalties provided by law.

The first requirement of the law is the filing of an appropriate return. For individuals generally, this must be done by March 15 following the end of the calendar year. The return must be filed with the appropriate Collector of Internal Revenue for the district in which is located the legal residence or principal place of business of the person making the return.

Under the present law every single person, and every married person not living with husband or wife, having a total income (earnings, together with other income) of $500 or more, and married persons living with husband or wife throughout the taxable year, who have an aggregate income (total earnings of both husband and wife, together with other income) of $1200 or more, regardless of the amount of net income, must file a return.

FARM TRACTORS IN WARTIME

Gasoline for Less Wear and Tear (Fifth of a Series of Six Articles)

By A. P. Peck Managing Editor, Scientific American

Farm tractors are of tremendous importance to the war effort today, representing, as they do, the farm power required to produce the foods and many of the fibers needed to feed, clothe, and equip not only the Army, Navy and civilian population of the United States but also to a large extent, of our allies as well. It is important, therefore, to know that many farmers who have been operating tractors that burned distillate or kerosene have found that by simply changing from these fuels to gasoline they gained an immediate increase in power of some 12 percent; by high compression engines, this power increase has been pushed to as high as 30 percent. And, what is equally important, since the production of tractors has been severely curtailed and most of those now in use will have to last for the duration, these farmers are finding that gasoline will add measurably to engine life.

A. P. Peck

In tests recently completed by research engineers, two similar tractors were operated for nearly 4000 hours each, one on distillate and the other on gasoline. These tractors were put to the same type of work for the same periods of time and at the end of the test both engines were torn down and minutely examined by experts. It was found that the engine parts of the distillate-burning unit were worn much more than those of the gasoline-burning engine; rings 89 percent more; pistons 135 percent more; cylinder walls 66 percent more; crankpins 133 percent more; and so on through the list. During these tests it was found that oil consumption of the distillate-burning engine increased greatly as wear continued and that the lubricating oil was badly diluted, showing that there is definitely a link between fuel and engine wear and crankcase dilution. Distillate and other low-grade fuels are difficult to vaporize during combustion. Thus some unvaporized fuel reaches the cylinders and is unburned. This unburned fuel goes down the cylinder walls, passes the pistons, and dilutes the oil in the crankcase. Diluted oil, of course, cannot do its lubricating job properly, and the result is that the engine parts show far more wear than with undiluted oil. And the greater the wear, the more dilution occurs.

To these important factors of more power and less wear and tear through the use of gasoline instead of distillate in tractor engines, can be added other advantages of interest to farmers. Tractors using low-grade fuels carry two fuel tanks, one for gasoline for starting and one for the fuel to be used after the engine gets hot. This means that the two liquids must be handled and stored on the farm.

Gasoline means easier tractor operation starting in all kinds of weather, smoother operation, and easy idling. Then, too, it looks at the time of writing as though distillate and kerosene soon may not be available as tractor fuels in many localities, and there will be a surplus of gasoline. The Office of Petroleum Coordinator is investigating the shortage of heavy fuels and it is quite possible that many tractor owners now using distillate may soon be forced to change to gasoline. It is fortunate that those farmers, whether they are familiar with them or not, will soon learn of the many advantages which gasoline has to offer.

A thought for the new year: "It would be more profitable if we planned for the future as seriously as we regret the past."—Anon.

This year, due to circumstances beyond our control, we joined the ranks described in the old saw about the baker's wife having no bread, nor the cobbler's children any shoes; in short, our engravers disappointed us in supplying the cut for our Christmas cards and not having been advised until too late, we were unable to send out our usual greetings. To the many friends who remembered us, we therefore wish to express our sincere gratitude in this word of explanation.

One of the first contributions ever used in this space was handed us by Mrs. M. S. Patton, who now brings to our attention the following clever bit which appeared in a recent issue of the White-face Times:

THE FELLOWS I'M ONE OF

I'm One of the Fellows Who Is Making the World Safe For Democracy.

I fought and fought but I had to go anyway. I was called in Class A; the next time I went to be in Class B—(be there when they go and be there when they come back.) I remember when I registered, I went up to a desk and the man in charge was my milkman. He said, "What's your name?" And I said "Oh you know my name." What's your name?" He barked, so I told him "August Childs." He said, "Are you an alien?" I said, "No, I feel fine." He asked me where I was born and I said "Pittsburgh." Then he said, "When did you first see the light of day?" I said "When we moved to Philadelphia." Then he asked me how old I was, and I told him, "Twenty-three the first of September." He said, "The first of September you'll be in China and that will be the last of August."

Early Treatment Aid In Preventing Impaired Eyesight

AUSTIN—Emphasizing the urgent need for parental supervision of all phases of child health, Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer said today, "Much of the impaired eyesight of advanced years could be prevented if sufficient interest in early life were applied and a temporary correction by means of glasses made when required." Parents, Dr. Cox asserted, should be watchful for conditions in the child such as frowning, squinting, persistent headache, eyeache, and watery eyes. If the youngster reads too closely or too far away from the face, that situation may also be significant of trouble.

"No child fancies wearing glasses, nevertheless, it is the obligation of those responsible for the future of young folks to have their eyes examined by a reputable specialist if any doubt arises that normal vision does not exist. It is much better for a child to wear glasses for a few years during early school life than to have permanently defective vision in later life," he declared.

According to the State Health Officer, any acute condition of a child's eyes calls for immediate treatment either by the family doctor or by a physician who specializes in diseases of the eyes.

Dr. Cox said that neglect of the eyes by no means is limited to children. Many older persons, some through vanity, indifference, or carelessness, fail to give proper attention to the care of their eyes. Penalties, he warned, are bound to occur for such inexcusable negligence.

"The eyes of the young, middle-aged, and older represent perhaps one of the most priceless of bodily possessions," the State Health Officer asserted. "To take care of them promptly and properly is a responsibility which never should be sidestepped."
