Texan in India Sees Hope for the Hungry

A WORKING MAN receives 34¢ per day in the Tungabhadra valley, Mysore, state of southern India, where George Knerim is instructing farmers to increase production through newly acquired irrigation. Knerim, a native of Floyd County, Texas, accompanied by his wife and younger son, Larry, 9, visited in Matador last week with his sister and family, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pohl and daughter, Carolyn.

George Knerim is listed as Agricultural Advisor, Water Use, with the U. S. International Cooperation Administration for four states, Mysore, Kerala, Andhra Pradesh and Madras, in southern India. He has been overseas five years and will return as soon as his leave is up. Knerim has had 18 years experience in irrigation, much of the time with the Pima Indians in Arizona. His home is in Chandler. His experience exactly fits his present assignment in India.

His challenge is 823,000 acres of land in the Tungabhadra valley which can now be irrigated with water from one of India's seven new dams. The soil is good (although depleted in some instances) and the climate is ideal, never dropping below freezing and averaging 60° degrees.

The problem is teaching farmers to use irrigation who have no money and who have lived through generations with the specter of famine always at their doors. For the past three years the farmers have been wasting 60% of the water.

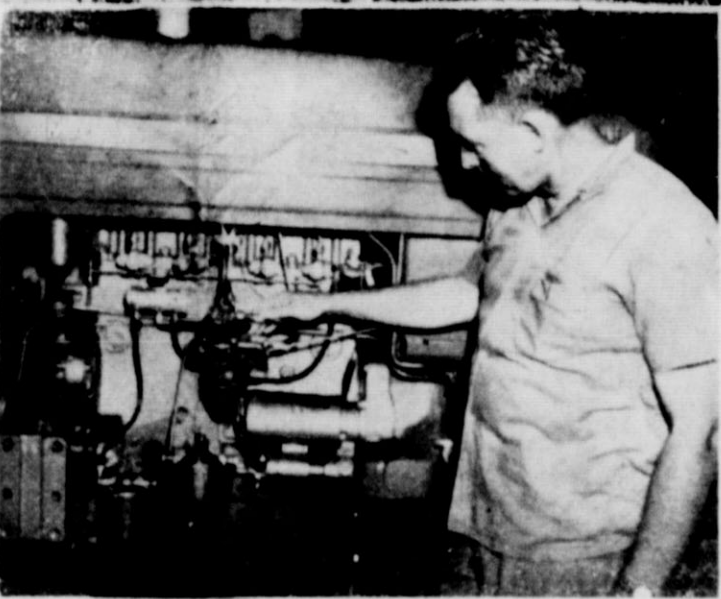

Knerim believes India may eventually feed its hungry people, many of whom have never owned a pair of shoes and have a life expectancy of 35 years. Millions live and die without ever having had all the food they want.

India has many problems. It has twice the population of the United States and half the territory. Experts believe the 400,000,000 population will double within the next ten years.

George Knerim is a patient and practical man. He realized that the farmer in India on his small farm (average 2½ acres) could not acquire modern farm equipment. He could not buy it, nor could he earn enough to operate it (gasoline is 70¢ per gallon in Bangalore, India where he is stationed).

Oxen and hand labor alone must be the answer. Knerim started out with the most primitive implements (like those used by the Mormons in Utah about 1875) and built wooden plows with steel pointed shares, and made wooden drags with which to level the soil.

He also built wooden ditches
