TRAIL DUST

By DOUGLAS MEADOR

Nature, unaware of time's intentions, drops another scented handkerchief and yellow buttercups dance to music of the wind.

The President went on the air Monday night to tell the people why he found it necessary to veto and promised farmers a substitute measure which would provide as much as 82% per cent of parity. He said: "I could not sign this bill into law because it was a bad bill. In months ahead it would have hurt more farmers than it would help. In the long run it would hurt all farmers."

Defending his action, the President said the welfare of the nation's farm families must not be a "partisan matter." He added: "I personally shall never treat it as such and I will always resist any attempt to make the farmer and his problems a political football."

LOOK AT THE facts—no matter what kind of truck you need. GMC's new light-duty power plants have as much as 16.2% greater displacement than the nearest competition. H.P.'s been upped as much as 20%. V8's are the latest in short-stroke design.

In the new half-tonners, a brand-new fast-ratio cruising axle gives you all the efficiencies of overdrive. And it's an option at a fraction of overdrive's usual price.

A new ride stabilizer gives Blue Chip light-duties remarkable new riding comfort. No need to fight the steering wheel—even on the poorest roads.

All GMC's now have a 12-volt electrical system. Tubeless tires are standard equipment. And a new boulevard styling makes a GMC far and away the best advertisement you can run.

In short, new 1956 Blue Chip GMC's are just about as impressive a line as you've ever seen. Values are even more remarkable. Drop by and see for yourself!

Elementary Elim

The Diary of Mary White

January 11, 1956, Wednesday
Too hoarse to talk much but made it through by having different students conduct classes. The students are enjoying my "no can talk" spell. Can't say that I blame them.

January 12, 1956, Thursday
All but gave up today. Couldn't breathe, couldn't talk and my patience must have stayed home in bed for I certainly didn't have any in the classroom. The new student teachers had worn off and bedlam set in. Oh, for a substitute!

January 13, 1956, Friday
Had it been any day but Friday I would have balked. By noon I was exhausted with the strain of trying to make my voice carry so was going to send them home, but they wanted to stay and see the Glenn Miller Story again. Oh, well, it has music and excitement and their homes have little of either, so I let Charlie show the whole thing again. I questioned my sanity and was surely glad my boss wasn't looking, but the children all went home happy, so guess it doesn't matter that the teacher's conscience hurts and that the boss would frown.

January 14, 1956, Saturday
Reports, dishes, beds and such don't have to be talked to, so while the throat rested the hands flew. Mail again today. I wondered why we had suddenly become the favored child along the route. Then found out that this was a charter deal and the pilot was just being considerate when he picked up our mail sack. Jane, the girl returning from Mt. Edgecumbe climbed out of the plane with the tears just rolling. The U. S. Marshall was right behind her and he picked up our mayor and took him back to Nome to start trial. A most unhappy occasion for the whole village.

Fred Crown, the pilot, visited with us long enough to have a cup of coffee. He is being transferred to Anchorage and Margaret Heller, Alaska Airlines office girl that we know, is going back to the States. Personnel really does turn over fast in this north country. Of all the people with whom we had become acquainted in Nome, there are two left now. One is the secretary in the ANS office and the other is the Methodist pastor, Willard Mecklenberg, who conducted Marelda's funeral.

January 15, 1956, Sunday
A beautiful clear sunrise with the temperature twenty above. This is the day, thinks I, that I get some really good pictures. But I was slow getting my togs on and loading my cameras and the weather did a West Texas trick. There was a sudden puff of wind, and before we could gather our coats about us and decide where it came from, another followed it and we realized that we were in for a blow. Back to shelter we scurried with only one family's picture taken.

Had a late lunch, then listened to E. W. bang pipes, turn valves and growl all afternoon. The radiators in the school room had quit and that howling wind was steadily lowering the temperature. The sixty-four dollar question was, could he get the airlock out by Monday morning. About 9:00 p. m. he turned the right valve. The pressure shot up and the air was forced out of the line. Oh heck! Had already been savoring the prospects of an enforced holiday.

January 16, 1956, Monday
Old Man Weather was still breathing savagely out of the north this morning. Every time a child came through the entrance (on the north, by the by) we got a whiff of his cold breath. Our radiators were hot but our room was not.

One fond parent came to me at noon complaining about how his darlings were being picked on. This was about the third time he had done this so I decided to get him out of my hair. After lunch I gave the children one more lecture on discrimination and told them I wanted all their mamas and papas in the school room at 7:00 o'clock for a meeting. I sent specific word that Mr. Complain was not to come. Promptly at 7:00 o'clock, in he trooped and seated himself on the front row. I burned like fury for a minute and was tempted to do a little discriminating myself, but by the time I stated talking, my anger had subsided somewhat and I said only one uncomplimentary sentence. I told them in plain English that if their children didn't like his children it was O.K. by me, but they could not tease and fight them. They simply had to leave them alone was my order, and that the next one caught teasing one of his four would be sent home and could come to school no more this year. They were so sober for a few minutes that I "quaked in my boots". I didn't know if I had made them all angry, or what I had done. I stood my ground, however, and waited. Slowly they began to talk and was I ever glad when I discovered they were on my side. They agreed that a child who would not mind what the teacher said, shouldn't be allowed to come to school.

Then they proceeded to hold a meeting in their language. I could not understand, of course, but they grinned at me occasionally and said an English word now and then and I got the gist. They were speaking of unity and like treatment for all in the village. That is a belief and custom very dear to the Eskimo heart. As Mischa Charles said, when he first heard the word socialism and heard someone speak of a socialist he thought it must be something awful. Later, when he discovered what the words meant he had to laugh, for Eskimos are socialists and good ones. What one has, all have and they mean it from the heart. When a hunter brings in meat, everyone is included.

The first Eskimo to adopt the white man's way of "what's mine is mine" was bitterly opposed. Fred Walker, the missionary pastor here, told us the story of the first instance of that kind in Elim. The U. S. government picked up what was considered the brightest child in each village and sent them to the States to school. After seven years in Pennsylvania and at Carlisle University, the boy from Elim returned. He caught a whale and when the people came and got themselves a piece, he got angry and called a council meeting. He proceeded to tell them of the white man's ways and to recommend them as best.

The eyes of the old hunters flashed and the meeting ended with Charles Saccheus, an excellent hunter and grandfather to the children I have in the schoolroom now, saying, "When you catch whale it is yours. When I catch whale, all village eat except you. You stay home!"

When our little night broke up, I nearly shot Mercy! A whale nearly blew my teeth and I gritted my teeth and said, "I am about twice as tough as strong as any women but I'm not!" Some of them lay on the ice and gave wind. B-r-r-r-r.

They Travel "In Class"

Our high school correspondent says that Economics and Geography students are going in for "grass roots" studying. They're going to charter buses and take off on Operation See-For-Yourself—have a ten-day look at some of the things they've been studying about. As I remember, it was hard to keep your mind on schoolbooks at this time of year. Today's kids can give in to that old urge to bust out of the classroom—with a clear conscience. Wish they'd take me along.

From where I sit, it is hard to see how the rest of the try lives. We find the "American" doing everything herding cattle to flying planes with everything from one chowder for his favorite beer to everything from beer to milk for his favorite beer. And the more we learn, the more we learn alike everyone is undernourished.
