The Diary of Mary White

March 8, 1956, Thursday

Another eight hour struggle with chores no one was in the mood to do and lessons no one wanted. Trying to get some things done so they could be mailed to Juneau. I ran across a letter in the files. It was written last year by Miss Eunice Logan, educational specialist at Juneau. I met and immediately liked her when we were through Juneau last July I am quoting from the letter because it revealed to yours truly what was happening to her and her pupils in the classroom.

"To most teachers, even to those dedicated souls known as 'born teachers' there comes a time during every school year which might be called a 'spiritual low'. It most frequently appears at that period which stretches endlessly between Christmas and the first day of April. Children, who prior to that time appeared in the eyes of their teachers as reasonably teachable human beings, suddenly assume the aspect of change-lings. Classroom discipline dissolves into chaos, teaching, before merely difficult, becomes drudgery, and suddenly, no one, absolutely, no one, is learning anything."

"At this time, travel folders blossom out on teachers' desks, job qualifications are studied avidly and a large percentage of all teachers resolve to shake the gray dishevelment of the teaching profession from their exhausted persons forever.

"This occupational disease seems to strike in the Arctic with particular violence. Doubtless, the bitterly cold and prolonged darkness is to some degree responsible.

"I cherish the memories of the years I taught above the Arctic Circle, but every winter I spent there this bleak discouragement came to envelop me with the smothering quality of a wet blanket. According to the school children, the very sun disapproved of the world at that period. When they saw it show but half a face above the horizon, they promptly sink from sight again, they often said, 'The sun he get up. He look around a little, he no like. He jump right back in bed again.' And by their general and continued perversity they seemed to tell me they were in complete agreement with the sun; that only the miserably misdirected ambition of the white man, and of school teachers in particular, would drag them out of bed to struggle needlessly in a frozen world.

"All this I recalled vividly when I read a recent letter from a discouraged teacher. Her troubles, which I knew were real indeed, had reached unbearable proportions, and she took the first step toward overcoming them by putting them on paper.

"They read like a veritable Pandora's Box of ills—a room of whom appeared disinterested, lazy and inattentive; who constantly asked, 'What comes next Teacher?' 'What page, Teacher?' and some of whom were even dishonest and untruthful.

"Knowing that most teachers are, even at this very moment, struggling to exorcise the same bag of serpents... it is a suggestion that, to avoid this time of discouragement, it might be well to discard previously conceived ideas concerning the length of time it takes to change the behavior pattern of children born to a different culture.

"The accumulated training of generations lead us to expect a certain response in a given situation. Repeatedly receiving, as often happens, a bafflingly different one throws us into a state of frustration that can only result in a classroom permeated with tension. To expect to establish in nine months a set of responses which meet our approval is to feed the fires of our disappointment, and may lead to the false conclusion that our standards are too high and the attainment of them an impossibility. One of the first verbal reassurances I received on this subject was given me by an Eskimo employee, a most faithful and dependable one, when I made him the recipient of an embittered tirade concerning the repeated tardiness of certain members of my class. 'You try teach these children about time,' he said mildly, 'and that's good, but they no learn quick. We Eskimo people no know much about time. Take me, when I was boy we no have clocks. We eat when we hungry. We sleep when we sleepy. Nobody tell us, 'Now it's time to eat. Now it's time to sleep.' Each fellow decide that just for himself. When fish come we hunt. We no need to know about time. Most these childrens live same way. You keep teaching. Some learn different, but it take long time."

"Ever after, when my effort to instill the children with a sense of orderly routine and a respect for time seemed futile, I reminded myself that the ancestors of these children had been hunters for more generations than we know about. For them to have said, 'Tomorrow at eight o'clock we will hunt whales, at twelve o'clock we will be home for lunch, at three o'clock we will have tea' would have been highly impractical.

"Character formation and the processes of acculturation being slow of accomplishment as they are, we should not feel that we are failures as teachers if the results of our work are not immediately apparent. If a small percentage of each generation is started on the road to a satisfactory adjustment to our complicated social order, we can consider that we have fulfilled our purpose as teachers."

End of quote and a big AMEN from my corner.

March 9, 1956, Friday

Thirty mile an hour east wind in Nome and Unalakleet. We knew as soon as we heard the report that there would be no mail today for these are the terminals for our planes. No plane for the sick baby and for the three from Elim who were to serve on jury duty. We went through the entire day with ears hopefully listening but there was no rewarding drone. The children begged for the old movie again since there was no new one. They joyously set up the room for the showing and promised to clean up after. Even saw it myself as worry over the sick and disappointed over no letters would not let me concentrate on my work.

Lion Harvey is a director in the Texas Lions Camp for Crippled Children, located near Kerrville. He explained how the camp operates and later showed colored slides of crippled children (ages 7 to 17) enjoying the camp.

He said the original 508 acres of land was donated by the government to Texas Lions at the close of the war. Lions now have buildings and equipment valued at more than one million dollars at the camp.

Every possible facility for pleasure of crippled children is provided. Capacity is 120 children every week for 12 weeks. Harvey said the entire scheme is one of a camp and not a hospital to afford crippled children (boys and girls) summer recreational pleasures enjoyed by normal children. The camp has a trained personnel of over 50. Support is through annual assessments of $3 per Lion member.

Far Away Place
Lion Forrest Campbell, in reporting the district convention at Amarillo, said it now seems possible a larger number of delegates will attend Lions International in Miami, than attended the Amarillo meeting.

"It is awkward to explain why more delegates will attend International convention 2,000 miles away than the district convention 135 miles distance," Campbell said, "but that now appears true."

CITY HAS ...

It was then that the broken insulator was found. In the meantime repair crews had been dispatched to Matador. Repair of the damage had been started by James (Pop) Price and assistants (Except in extreme emergencies, any repair of the 66,000 volt line is left to regular linemen crews). About 11:15 p. m. the repairs had been made and power restored to the two communities.

Three Hours Of Water
When the power failed, the city had about a three-hour supply of water and Water Superintendent Lee Burns feared the hazard of a fire. The light show that fell about the time the bolt of lightning struck reduced the consumption to some extent. Also the fact that the city was without lights caused many to go to bed (some without supper) and further reduced consumption. The water supply was ample for the emergency.

Regular Wednesday evening prayer meeting was conducted at the First Baptist Church by candle light. Waybourn's Cafe remained open by using a lantern (stoves are gas-fired). The Tribune, ready to start a press run of this issue, was brought to a standstill. The newspaper is about 99 per cent electric operation.

Still Dry Here

Rainworms for the past four days have failed to leave any appreciable moisture in Matador, although most of the county has received a fair amount of rainfall. A storm Tuesday evening is reported to have left in the neighborhood of one to two inches of moisture in the White Star and Flomot areas.
