How do Texans' gardens grow?

Texans love their gardens so much that green industry sales exceeded $7.7 billion in 1997. About 55 percent of sales are through retail marketing channels by do-it-yourself gardeners. The remaining 45 percent are generated by the landscape service sector.

Is your home Y2K compliant?

There is a great deal of information circulating about possible technical disturbances in the year 2000 (Y2K). One could easily spend an entire day viewing just a fraction of the many sites on the Internet related to the subject.

Reactions vary: some people are frantic and others think the computer problem will be just an inconvenience. Worries center around the fact that many computer programs and computer chips recognize only the last two digits in a date. Therefore, Y2K may be read as 1900. However, businesses and government agencies have been working hard to avoid or reduce the consequences of this glitch.

If you are worried about your computer, be aware that the Y2K problem is manageable if you take some time to correct it. Most computers built after 1955 are Y2K compliant. Compliance means that your computer is programmed to advance to the date 2000. If your computer is not Y2K compatible, you may have to make some changes.

Act now to ensure all hardware and software is appropriate for Y2K. Find out whether your computer requires changes. Contact your PC supplier or manufacturer about the problem and possible solutions. Many have toll-free telephone numbers and Web sites to answer your Y2K questions.

You can also talk to a computer consultant or purchase testing programs for your computer hardware and software applications. The U.S. General Services Administration Web site includes an evaluation of Y2K tools and compliance solutions.

Computer software companies are not the only ones enjoying a boom in business as a result of Y2K concerns. Some companies may be using the new millennium to sell products "for survival." The Better Business Bureau (BBB) warns consumers to carefully consider available sources of information and make careful decisions when making purchases.

Use common sense to separate fact from fiction. If you are concerned about a specific problem, do research before making a decision. Information about Y2K issues, which addresses common problems and some realistic solutions, is available from a multitude of sources. The President's Council on Year 2000 Conversion operates a toll-free line, 1-888-USA-4-Y2K, for consumers to call for pre-recorded information or to talk to an information specialist about Y2K computer-related problems. The information line is intended to provide the latest information on how the problem may, or may not, affect government services, banks, household appliances, and other things.

If you do decide to shop from the Internet for Y2K products, do research first. Deal with reputable merchants, think about the security and privacy of your transactions, and remember to find out about return policies.

Above all, remember your rights. Under the Fair Credit Billing act, the consumer has a right to challenge incorrect charges, or misrepresented merchandise.

Use the BBB. If you are unsure about a particular company, and are interested in doing business with them, contact the BBB to request a reliability report. BBB OnLine operates a reliability seal program. Any company displaying the BBB seal can be checked online simply by clicking the seal.

GUESS WHO WAS NAMED ONE OF THE COUNTRY'S BEST IN CARDIAC CARE.

Covenant, of course.

Covenant Heart Center has just been named to an elite list of the best heart hospitals in the United States. An independent study named the Top 100 Hospitals in America for Cardiac Intervention, and Covenant Heart Center was one of only three Texas hospitals to earn a place on the coveted list (and the only one in our West Texas/Eastern New Mexico service area).

We're proud, yes. But what makes our pride really swell are our employees, the cardiologists, and cardiothoracic surgeons on staff who earned this honor. We knew they were a blue ribbon team a long time ago.

Isn't it nice to know that the finest heart care in the country is right at your doorstep?

Ag Disparagement Laws are necessary

It's an unfortunate commentary on our society when it's necessary to pass a law to encourage people to tell the truth. But that's the world we live in now, and that's why agricultural disparagement laws are necessary. Let's look at the origins of ag disparagement laws now on the books in Texas and a dozen other states. In 1989, the television show "60 Minutes," at the encouragement of an activist group called the Natural Resources Defense Council, aired a report on Alar in apples that was inflammatory and highly damaging to the apple industry. The ensuing frenzy saw mothers dumping apple juice down the sink and chasing down school buses to remove the allegedly deadly fruit from their children's lunch boxes.

The report also had another effect—it devastated the apple industry in the United States and put some apple growers out of business.

So they sued. One of the arguments the defendants ("60 Minutes" and the Natural Resources Defense Council) used in the litigation was that farmers could not, as a matter of law, recover damages in a defamation case even if they proved that the defendants hurt farmers by knowingly presenting false information. They argued, successfully, that farmers are too remote from the defamatory statements to be entitled to recovery.

So, in spite of the fact that the claims made on the show had no basis in science, the apple growers lost their suit and were told by the court, in essence, that they had no legal protection from false and disparaging statements made against the product they produce.

In response, agricultural producers in 13 states asked for and received that protection. Texas was, in fact, the 13th state to pass such a law, which merely closes a legal loophole established by the precedence set by the Alar case and gives producers of perishable ag products similar protection to that enjoyed by other businessmen.

Why are ag products any different from any other product and, therefore, outside the law when it comes to general business disparagement? Because ag products are, in most cases, a commodity and not a name brand. And many ag products are highly perishable. Ag disparagement laws don't apply to products such as cars, tobacco, beer or other non-perishable or non-food items.

Because of the perishability of some ag products, including beef, an ag producer usually has a very narrow window, sometimes just a few weeks, to sell an entire year's worth of work. When false and disparaging statements about the products they produce are made—and economic, hard dollar damage results—it has the potential to not just wipe out a year's worth of income, but an entire lifetime of effort. We think that's worth protecting.

Imagine this situation. An activist group knowingly makes up false numbers from thin air to assert that potatoes cause cancer and then makes a big media splash in an effort to scare consumers into sending money. Headlines scream, broadcasters break into programs and the whole event causes a major potato scare. The farmers who have to take their potato crop to market at that time are devastated by the suddenly depressed market conditions. Some, in order to meet debt obligations, are forced to lay off employees or sell the farm.

Existing ag disparagement laws are the only shield that producers, be they carrot growers or cattle feeders, have to set the record straight and reclaim some of the damage they suffer. Opponents of these laws are, in effect, telling farmers and ranchers, "Tough luck. Your livelihood, the livelihood of your family and employees and the economic damage you suffer are not worthy of legal protection."

That's wrong. It's wrong legally and it's wrong morally.

And these ag disparagement laws do not take issue with free speech. Certain tests must be met in order to use this law as legal protection—the person making the false and disparaging statements knew they were false and the statements resulted in economic damage. Ag disparagement laws merely require members of society to engage in responsible speech and to be accountable for what they say.

Ag producers don't think it's unreasonable to hold people to that standard.

All Americans value free speech and the right to protect oneself against attack. It is in that spirit that ag disparagement laws were enacted. It is in that spirit that every American should join ag producers in the effort to keep those laws on the books.

PCG Elects 1999-2000 Officers

Newly selected members of the Plains Cotton Growers, Inc. Board of Directors met for the first time following the organizations 42nd Annual Meeting and elected officers for the 1999-2000 crop year.

In addition to the officer elections, the PCG Board had the opportunity to hear from United States Department of Agriculture Risk Management Agency Administrator Ken Ackerman.

Ackerman discussed the state of the Federal Crop Insurance Program and answered questions regarding Clinton Administration ideas for crop insurance reform and provided feedback about current reform ideas currently being discussed across the nation.

PCG Bylaws allow eligible candidates to serve a maximum of two one-year terms in each of the three elected officer positions within the organization.

The PCG Board voted unanimously to re-elect current President Don Langston, Vice President Ronnie Hopper, and Secretary-Treasurer Mark Williams to serve second terms in their respective positions.

In addition to electing new officers PCG Board members also selected a new Executive Committee to serve in 1999-2000. PCG Executive Committee members are selected from each of the six districts within the PCG service territory and join current PCG officers and the organizations two most immediate past Presidents on the committee.

PCG's 1999-2000 PCG Executive Committee

- District One: Kevin Riley
- District Two: James Brown
- District Three: Dan B. Smith
- District Four: Al Griffis, Jr.
- District Five: Rickey Bearden
- District Six: Van Gaskins
- President: Don Langston
- Vice President: Ronnie Hopper
- Secretary Treasurer: Mark Williams
- 1st Most recent Past President: Jackie Burris
- 2nd Most Recent Past President: Frank B. Jones, Jr.

PCG's Annual Meeting was well attended and featured outstanding presentations from Memphis cotton merchant Billy Dunavant, Jr.; Congressman Charles Stenholm, Zach Brady on behalf of Senator Robert L. Duncan; and Lindy Patton from the Texas Boll Weevil Eradication Foundation.

PCG President Don Langston and Executive Vice President Steve Verett detailed many of the activities the organization has been involved with over the past year.

Permian Basin Approves BW Eradication

Cotton producers and landlords in the Permian Basin Boll Weevil Eradication Zone have voted overwhelmingly to establish and fund an eradication program. 2074 valid ballots were counted in Austin Thursday of which 73 percent were in favor of an assessment. This successful referendum means that slightly more than half the High Plains cotton production area now falls within active boll weevil eradication zones.

Most voters in the Permian Basin Zone were relieved at the result. There had been growing concern that a negative vote would have eliminated the six-county area from any share of state funds aimed at helping producers rid themselves of the pest.

Senator Robert Duncan of Lubbock was elated at the referendum outcome. He stated, "The Permian Basin result will certainly assist our effort in obtaining state funding."

The Permian Basin Boll Weevil Eradication Zone consists of approximately 780,000 acres in six counties: Dawson, Ector, Howard, Martin and portions of Borden and Midland.
