HOW TO INSURE A BIG WHEAT CROP

By the Southwestern Wheat Improvement Association

Plow the ground early. Cultivate the plowed ground as often as necessary to prevent weed growth.

It is agreed by all good wheat farmers and by the Experiment Stations of the southwest that it does not pay to plow too shallow nor too deep for wheat—from 6 to 7 inches deep gives best results.

If plowing cannot be done right away after harvest, the land should be double disked—to do this immediately and plow later gives almost as good results as to do affi the plowing early.

Listing is more rapid than plowing. Where listing is practiced, list early; work the ridges down several weeks before seeding; cultivate as often as necessary to prevent weed growth. Double listing or splitting the ridges has been less profitable than single listing.

To prevent blowing in the western parts of Kansas and Nebraska, the Panhandle of Texas, and eastern Colorado, the ground should be disked rather than plowed when it is loose. After plowing it should be cultivated with implements that leave the fields furrowed and the surface rough. In this western district it does not pay to plow for wheat at all unless it can be done early, and if it is absolutely necessary to prepare land late, double disking will prove about as good a method as any.

Grow wheat in rotation with other scene in the surface of the su

Why Hold Back

An oil scout informs the Reporter that he is ready to contract with one of the largest companies in the United States to put down a number of deep tests in the Spearman country, if he could only secure the lease of a few tracts of land, the owners of which seem to be inclined to block the game and hold back development. The Spearman country stands in need of only one thing to put it in the front rank with the richest producing sections of the United States and that is development. To hold back development at this particular time may mean that this field will not be properly ex plotted for many years to co What we need is immediate development and if there is not chance in the world to lose a penny and a fighting chance to produce millions in gas and oil, it would seem that land owners would be not only willing but anxious to sign leases and contracts wnich would put the wheels in motion. in responsible parties and concerns should be given a cold shoulder, but when firms and individuals can produce evidence of reliability, earthly good can come from driving them away from our very door. Genius and Barbara

By AGNES CARLTON

It was a pretty picture of genuine comfort and conjugal happiness that the young Mertons presented as they in young actors presented a step actor in sand seated opposite, smiling over pleasant reflections and industriously setting neat stitches in her embroidery.

"By jove, here's a chance for some easy money, Bab. The Times announces a short story contest with a first prize of $200.

young life?" Bab was rudely unim-pressed. "I never knew that you could write."

"I guess you lose sight of the fact that I was on our paper when I was in college," with dignity, to which Bab was about to reply that she had heard of that honor far too frequently to be allowed to forget about it, but she managed to check herself.

Without further discussion, Jack retired to his den, from whence soon is-sued the irregular, faltering click, click of the dusty old typewriter, a battered relic of his not so remote student days; and for the next week, Bab saw very little of her literary inclined spouse, for each evening as soon as supper had been eaten he closeted himself with his muse and wrote and rewrote, far into the wee hours of the morning.

Each day on leaving for the office, his final admonition to Bab was to keep her hands off the papers on his was completed; and Jack departed buoyantly with the long manuscript envelope in his pocket, without sub-mitting this work of his fancy for Bab's approval.

Bab's approval.

In the basket at the side of his deak lay a sheaf of papers, torn carelessly in halves. Glancing idly at them as she emptied the ash tray, Bab perceived that they were typewritten, with corrections made here and there in ink. Quick as a flash she pounced upon them—the first draft of the mysterious, story. It was the work of but reflows. story. It was the work of but a few minutes to piece the sheets together, and there, in bold capitals the title stared up at her: "The Third Side of the Triangle." With a little gasp, she commenced reading. When side of the Transie. With a little gasp, she commenced reading. When she had reached the end of the second page, two scarlet spots burned in her cheeks. When she had finished two sheets more, she could stand it no of course, there was another woman in his life. He could never plead his here's cause so feelingly without hav-ing had the experience of a secret love. To think that there had been someone else all this dime, "a willowy, velvet-eyed charmer," to quote Jack's typewritten description of his heroine. It was too much!

Well, Bab decided hastily, she would stand in the way of his happiness no

Fleeing to her room, she got into her street clothes and with tearful haste crammed some things into her travel-ing bag. So this was to be the end of things—for her, at least. For Jack it was to be but the beginning, judging by his story. After pinning an almost illegibly acrawled note to Jack's smokillegibly scrawled note to Jack's smok-ing jacket, she cast one last heart-broken giance about their little love nest and then took her departure. Three hours later she was sobbing out the tragic tale of her shattered married life on her mother's sympa-thetic bosom—all about Jack's romance married life on her mother's sympathetic bosom—all about Jack's romance of the mismated man and his later meeting with the right woman; his struggle to remain true to his promise to the trusting wife; his final capitulation and his attempts to keep the truth from being known. That was as far as she had perused the story. Even as she falteringly recounted the tale of woe, she wondered what had been the fate of the deceived wife and how Jack's story had been concluded.

"But, honey," her mother sought to "Joe wonderful boy—I can hardly wait to see you." Bab cried with re-Anyhow, I shouldn't be surprised if Jack could write. I always thought he was a right smart young man."

"Nonsense, mother; it would take more than imagination to write a story as realistic as that. Well, it makes no difference to me now."

difference to me now

That evening, as Bab was making a pretense of reading the newspaper and, incidentally, failing miserably at it, the telephone pealed forth a shrill summons; and Jack's voice, filled with agitated curiosity, met his wife's ears.

"What on earth has happened, Bab—what have I done?" he questioned in bewilderment.

"Surely it is not necessary for me to tell you that," parried Bab stiffly. "I am thankful that I discovered it when I did, for I should most certainly not wish to remain a barrier to your happiness."

"Discovered what? I don't understand, Bah. What has come over you?"

"I'm afraid we will not gain anything by discussing matters further.
I shall continue to stay with mother,

"Divorce!" echoed Jack, more mystified than ever. "But who said I wanted a divorce? Oh, I say, Bab, what's the idea? I think I had better run out to see you."

"No, I won't have you come. I shall refuse to see you," accompanied by a violent hanging up of the receiver, whereat Jack heaved a monstrous sigh.

strous sigh.

Jack missed Bab's tender, almost motherly care of him; and the increasingly chaotic state of the house ruffled his composure. His erstwhile pleasant evenings had grown to be nightmares of bed making and dish washing, but each morning he left for the office happily confident that his return would be welcomed by a contrite little helpmeet. However, Bab remained adamant, masking her real remained adamant, masking her real feelings with a carefully assumed at-titude of indifference, although the thought that Jack had really his secret love almost drove her fran-tic. So it was with a leap of joy in her heart that she heard his voice over the 'phone one golden morning.

THE BELLS

Innumerable and interesting are the traditions surrounding bells.

Bells have ever played an important part in religious ceremonies.

There are numerous legends that consecrated bells would, if stolen, re-turn to their own home, ringing all

St. Paulinus of Nola and Pope Sabian in the Seventh century are each credited with the introduction of bells at mass.

The Angelus bell, always rung thrice a day takes its name from the first words of the prayer. The De-Profundis bell sounds one hour after

It was only a comparatively recent date that bells were used for calling people to church. For ages they were designed solely for keeping evil spirits at a safe distance.

In the books of Exodus and Ecclesiastes the ornaments of the high priest's ephod include bells, so that "their sound might be heard whenever he goeth in or cometh out of the sanc-

In many English parishes the shriving bell used to be rung the morning of Shrove Tuesday to remind the faithful to confess before Lent. This has now changed its name to "Pancake bell."

As nearly as may be determined the object, of the curfew, or couvrefeu (cover fire), rung in olden times as a signal for the extinguishing of all fires, was exclusively political or so-cial, and not religious.

HIKING DOWN THE LONG BROWN PATH

Vacationists With Shelter Tents and Tin Cow Learning to Walk All Over Again.

Oh! It's not the pack that you carry on your back
Nor the rife on your shoulder.

It's the last long mile*
Cathalaguagh Marching Song.

Stringing out from the suburban transit terminals of New York every Sunday and holiday goes the army of khaki-clad hikers. There may be an automobile for every twenty of the country's population, but a host of city folks disprove the theory of a future leg-enfeebled citizenry and are learning to walk all over again.

To the more casual minded, the hike is just exercise, but to those who catch its real significance the hike eans a great deal more. cheapest form of recreation therefore appeals to those living in crowded districts and unable to avail themselves of the more expensive amusements. And these people, be it noted, are just those the country is so anxious to have spread out and settled in the farming sections. hike, indeed, has possibilities as a real starter for the "back to the farm"

Doughboy and Boy Scout Lead Way Just a brief survey of the rollicking groups which move off from the out lying terminals on holidays establishes a few general types. There is the ex-service man and his friends who will hear from him the story of more serious excursions on the muddy roads of France. He tightens a strap here and another there on the blanket roll adjustment or the "shelter half," in which the commis-sary is packed for the mid-day feast by the roadside. Expert directions come from him on the method of slinging the pack so it will not feel so heavy or interfere with the free body movement. He will pass along the information gained in his army days, of how that same pack was evolved after numerous experiments to find the easiest way of carrying the heaviest load. With results he now compliments, but which he characterized when a doughboy as a "blankety-blank total failure."

Then there are the boy scout par-ties, adept at everything pertaining to "shanks mare" traveling and wood craft. The ex-service man and the boy scout are ploneers in the hiking game. Listen to one of them right off the train and making ready for a twelve mile jaunt: "Get that can teen over to the side, Jimmle, and it won't keep bouncing off your les every step. Is it filled? Well, then every step. Is it filled? Well, then we drink. How about the eats? Let's check 'em off. You got the spuds Bill; the bacon Jimmie. Who has the offee and the Borden tin cow coffee and the Borden th cow?"

"Right here," announces a freckler comrade of the road, patting his knap sack. "Snitched the mocha and the can of milk when Sis wasn't looking."
"Well, then, let's go!" snaps the commander of the expedition.

The veteran from the crowded city tenement has found a new territor; to roam and one almost unknown to his associates. There is, in short, a rapid cutting down of the differential between farm and city

In the meantime, knowledge must precede a true appreciation of what the country holds, and this is what the hike supplies. There is more ap-peal in one apple tree in blossom than in reams of printed matter put out to induce the citizen of the city to induce the citizen of the city change his abode to the country. change his abode to the country. The hiters constitute a growing army, equipped with bacon, spuds, coffee and tin cow for merely a day's outing but nevertheless seeing sights that make them yearn to be among them all the time.
