Part of the funds. Also it will take thousands of employees in the Federal service to handle the claims, to investigate them and to weed out the spurious ones.

This is fine as far as it goes, but it goes farther. After the story is all told, there comes the inevitable sequence dramatically announcing Pearl Harbor.

Perhaps by the time "Bombardier" is released we'll have that "island base" and something like the films climactic sequence can have happened. Meanwhile, Hollywood ought to remember that Japanese cities will never be laid in ashes by celluloid dreams.

Early in the afternoon we met again in the Jacobys' room in the Bayview Hotel. There were Mel and Annalee, Ray Cronin, Carl Mydans and his wife, Sheely Smith of Life Magazine. None of us had seen Arch Royal Gunnison of NANA, or Jack Percival, the Australian reporter, recently. Mel had important news. "I met a captain who is going out to Mariveles by freighter tonight and will take us along if we decide to risk it."

"I'm going," I said. "Anything to take out their hands even if it's only for a few hours longer." Carl said, "It seems foolish to go, and since Shelley is with me we will both stay here and be interned." Cronin and Brines made similar decisions, feeling that they could not desert their families. Mel was undecided until Annalee made up his mind for him. "We're going, Mel."

We went and as dawn broke on New Year's Day we found ourselves anchored close to the north shore of Corregidor. We had dodged mine fields and Japs during the night and it had been an extraordinary New Year's.

We scrambled ashore and followed, threading our unfamiliar way between one-story buildings of corrugated iron and wood. We came to an air raid shelter built of concrete and shaped roughly like a subway car. There was room for
