Air strike slows trans-Atlantic flights

WASHINGTON (AP) - Top executives of the airline industry endorsed the Reagan administration's firing of 12,000 striking air controllers Tuesday but said turmoil in the airlanes is costing them $30 million a day and will cause layoffs, pay cuts and disruptions for at least a year.

Meantime, trans-Atlantic traffic was curtailed on a second day of turmoil that threatened to become even worse over the weekend.

Plans to reopen the vital air traffic control center at Gander, Newfoundland, collapsed Tuesday, dashing hopes that near-normal air traffic could be resumed between the United States and Europe.

The Canadian government had announced earlier that the Gander center, closed because of a boycott by Canadian controllers reacting to the strike by U.S. controllers, would reopen Tuesday evening.

Local strikers axed by FAA

By INEZ RUSSELL UD Reporter

Eighteen striking Lubbock area air traffic controllers have received letters of termination from the Federal Aviation Association, Larry Craig, tower chief at Lubbock International Airport said Tues-

"It's a typical bureaucratic process we're going through," Craig said. The striking controllers have seven days to appeal the termination. The controllers' union, the Professional

Air Traffic Controllers' Organization (PATCO), went on strike July 27, after failing to reach a contract agreement with the federal government.

PATCO wanted an estimated $490 on wage and benefits package from the government, which offered a $40 million contract package. Secretary of Transportation Drew Lewis disagreed with the union's cost estimate, saying the PATCO demands would cost the government $600 million.

As government employees, the air traffic controllers had signed a no-strike contract. However, when the contract dispute was not settled, the controllers

President Reagan vowed to fire the striking controllers and set Wednesday, July 30, as the deadline for the strikers to return to work. He kept his vow. When the striking controllers did not return to work, the FAA begin sending them letters of termination.

Because the air traffic controllers are civil service employees, the government must go through certain procedures before the controllers officially are fired.

In Lubbock, Craig said no one had been fired officially, but he estimated the striking members have received their termination letters.

Craig said things were "going well" at the Lubbock airport, saying "we're here if anyone wants to fly.

Rain showers have reduced the work load at the airport, mainly because Reese Air Force Base has been sending up fewer flights in the rain, Craig said.

The rain isn't causing the controllers any problems, though, he said.

Craig said the 22 controllers who did not walk off the job are handling the airport work load without assistance from the military. In other cities around the country, military personnel have been brought in to help keep airports

"Things are going super good here," Craig said.

But Craig said he isn't allowed to show reporters the tower's operation because of a recent directive from Washington instructing regional offices to keep out the

Craig said a similar order was issued at the beginning of the strike, but later rescinded. Last night, another order was issued telling regional offices to bar the

"We'd rather be open," Craig said. "We kind of wanted to show off, but we got instructions last night to shut out the

Craig said he could give no reason for the order.

But several hours after that announcement, the Canadian transportation department said the suspension of service at Gander would continue indefinitely because the government had been unable to gain commitments from the controllers to handle flights to and from the United States.

Dave Austin, a department spokesman, said that until those commitments were obtained, the government was not prepared to see air traffic resumed through the airspace under Gander's jurisdiction.

In the first report that the center would reopen, the department had said the controllers agreed to perform their duties.

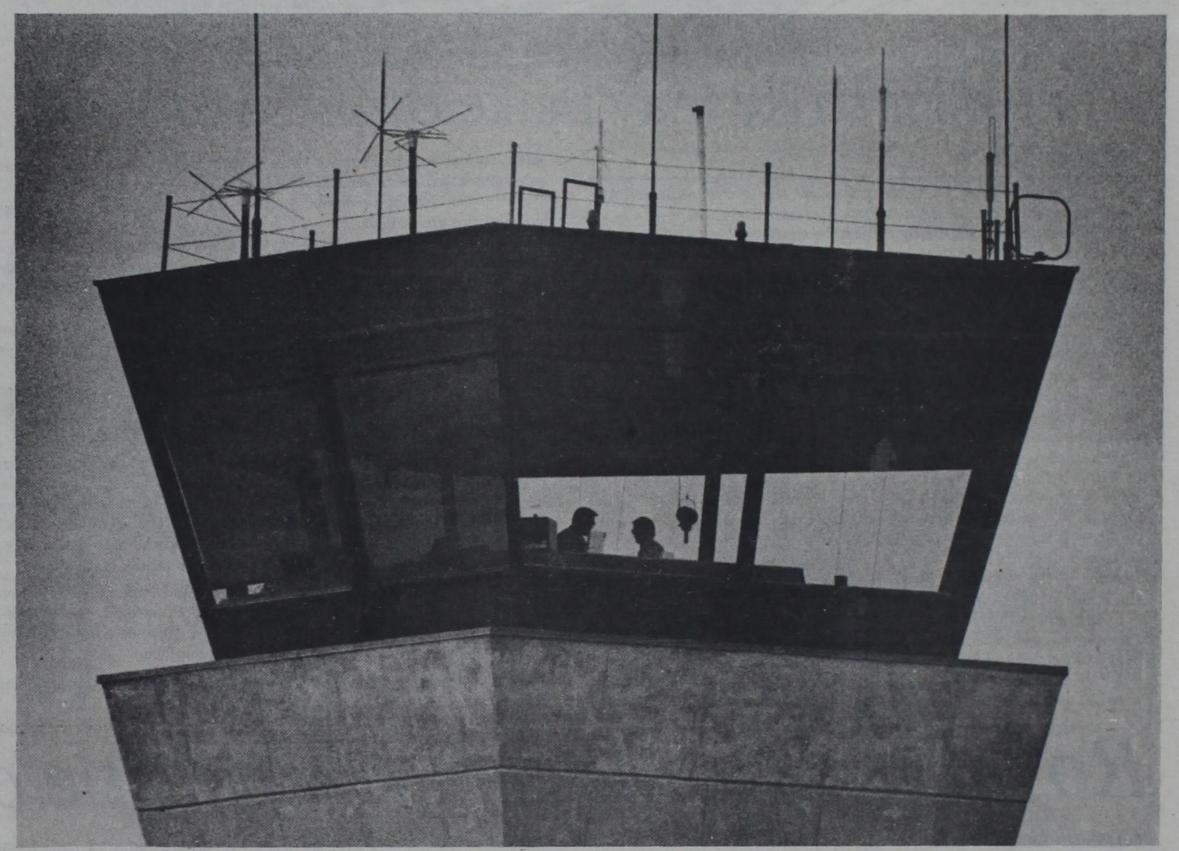

The action by the Gander controllers, who handle air traffic along the heavily traveled northern Atlantic corridor, cut U.S.-bound flights from Europe to a trickle, stranding thousands of travelers at European airports.

About half of all scheduled flights had been canceled when the Gander center was closed. The Canadian staffers who joined in the boycott said the strike by about 12,000 U.S. controllers made it unsafe to handle flights to and from the United States.

The British Civil Aviation Authority, responsible for directing flights from Europe to North America, established one alternative route via Prestwick air control center in Scotland direct to U.S. air space, bypassing Gander.

As a result, airport lounges in London, Bonn, Rome and Copenhagen were crammed with peak summer travelers, hundreds of whom faced overnight delays. Many were Americans visiting relatives among 260,000 troops stationed in West Germany.

The 600-member Spanish Association of Air Controllers, in a unanimous vote, decided to boycott flights to the United States but said its members would handle incoming trans-Atlantic aircraft.

Air traffic controllers who did not strike manned Lubbock's airport control tower Tuesday. The 22 local controllers who chose not to strike are keeping flight operations near normal without military assistance.

The tower was declared off-limits to reporters in a Washington mandate, though local controllers were eager to show how well the tower was operating. (Photo by Ron Jenkins)

Med School dean search committee chosen

Cavazos waiting for responses

By SUSAN CORBETT UD Reporter

Tech president Lauro Cavazos said Tuesday he has chosen a Tech Medical School dean search committee, but will not release all committee names until members respond

Cavazos said Dr. Edward Thomas, associate chairperson of anesthesiology at the medical school, will serve as search committee chairperson. Sam Richards, executive director of the Health Science Center, also has been named to the committee. Only five other members of the committee have accepted nominations. The remaining six have until Thursday to reply to Cavazos' request. He said the committee represents a balance of clinical and research people from medical school centers in Lubbock, El Paso, Amarillo and Odessa.

Cavazos said he believes the selection process will not take more than one year. He said he will ask the committee to screen applicants and narrow the field to four pro-

Cavazos said there will be no problem finding qualified applicants.

"There is always a fair number of people looking for deanship positions because there is always a considerable turnover in that type of position," Cavazos said.

He said the quality of applicants for chairmanship positions in the last few years has been superb, an indication the search will be productive.

"I want someone who will make us the best in the country. That may sound like a hard goal to achieve. I don't think so," Cavazos said. "The opportunities here are in-

"We're looking for someone who is committed to a balance in areas of research, teaching and patient care," he said.

"I have a bias about strong research programs, but we must have someone who is strong in all three areas. Sometimes administrators are chosen for the wrong reasons, like a great record in research activities. This dean is going to be giving leadership in all

He said the candidate must be committed to excellence in academics and become an academic leader of the medical school.

"The new dean must be able to relate to the people of the school and the community. He must be committed to a regional concept, establish a good relationship with the different schools and other parts of the university," Cavazos said.

"He must be someone who can project where the medical school is going so Tech can move to the forefront in that area.

He stressed the importance of fundraising qualities inherent in the choice. "A very important part of being a dean of a medical school is getting out there and raising the money. It's an incredibly hard job," Cavazos said. He said the new dean will have to continue developing the medical school, strengthening clinical, research and basic sciences. Cavazos said the dean will have a great deal to work with at Tech, where duties include strengthening residency placement of graduating students, recruiting top students into beginning programs, and developing the newest medical school expansion

"The school is doing very well. We've attracted excellent people," Cavazos said, "We had some terrible publicity in the last few years and the only way we can turn it around

Plant construction 'beneficial' — Hance

U.S. Rep. Kent Hance

By SUSAN CORBETT UD Reporter

U.S. Rep. Kent Hance said Monday construction of carbon dioxide reclamation plants to recover American oil will benefit Lubbock and the rest of nation by helping solve energy pro-

Hance made his comments at the groundbreaking ceremony for a new carbon dioxide recovery plant at Lubbock Power and Light's Holly Avenue Power Station on the Slaton highway. He said businesses like the new plant will benefit from the recently passed Conable-Hance tax bill he co-sponsored because tax schedules will be changed to speed up tax write-offs.

Mayor Bill McAlister, master of ceremonies, agreed with Hance that the carbon dioxide plant is a product of combined interests, and other dignitaries at the ceremony praised the progress of Lubbock's publicly-owned utility company. "This particular type of business illustrates how a private industry and a public utility can work together," said Lee Stafford, president of the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce. The Carbon Dioxide Technology Corporation of Houston and Lubbock Power and Light will work together to "get the oil out of the Garza County fields," south of Lubbock said Bill Wiggins, president of the carbon dioxide company.

Plans call for construction of a pipeline to transport the carbon dioxide from the LP&L plant just outside Lubbock to oil fields in Garza County, near Post.

Wiggins said the plant, to be built by Brown and Root of Houston, will be operating in one year. The plant is expected to

The plant is designed to recover carbon dioxide from waste stack gases now discharged into the air at the Holly Street plant. The plant will be the first in the world to use carbon dioxide to recover oil. An projected 15-20 percent increase in the amount of oil recovered is expected after a year of plant operations.

Carroll McDonald, Lubbock director of electric utilities, said carbon dioxide has been used in the past with gas wells, but not with electric power plants.

"Carbon dioxide has its own pressure. When injected into oil fields, it opens the formations and allows oil to flow more freely," McDonald said.

He said the same principle is applied with the use of water flooding oil wells, a common practice until this point. Now the demand for more carbon dioxide plants is tremendous, McDonald said.

The carbon dioxide taken from the power plant stack gas will be dried and compressed for pipeline delivery to the oilfields, arriving in a liquid state, cooled in the underground 35-mile

Barnett resigns Tech planning post

Glenn Barnett, Tech's vice president for Planning, announced his resignation Monday, effective Aug. 31. Barnett has served as a Tech administrator for 13

No interim vice president has been named by Tech president Lauro Cavazos, who accepted Barnett's resignation.

Cavazos has said Barnett's job will remain open for the time being. Administration insiders are guessing Cavazos may reorganize the administrative staff at this time, eliminating the position of vice president for Planning.

Barnett did not comment on any possible reorganization, saying, "I don't think there's any certainty about it (possible reorganization). I don't think that a person who's leaving should have an opinion." "I decided to retire because I got to be 65." Barnett said of his reasons for stepping down. "Everybody retired at 65 until a few years ago, and my plans were set for that. Sixty-five came and went a few weeks ago, so I decided to retire."

Barnett said his years at Tech have been exciting. "The university's moved ahead," he said. "The concerns are quite different than when I first arrived. We're talking like a big university now, and we are. We're a national university now. We weren't then.

Barnett said he had made no definite post-retirement plans, but expects to remain active.

He has worked as a school administrator for 39 years, coming to Tech in 1968 as executive vice president and dean of the newly-established College of Education. Later, Barnett's title was changed to vice president for Planning. He was influential in nearly all major decisions in the '70s, when nearly $140 million was spent on new structures that contain more than half of Tech's present total floor space. "I feel pride in the university growing from a limited school to a large one. I take pride in getting the medical school. . .. Physical expansion has been the most evident, but it's been an overall expansion."

Cavazos was unavailable for comment, but said in a news release Barnett could "justly take a great deal of credit for the growth in the quality of academic programs as well as for the more physical growth of the university, the Health Sciences Center and the Museum of Texas Tech University."

"While I accept the fact that it is time he pursues his special personal interests, his excellent advice as well as his everpresent good humor will be missed by administrators, faculty and students," Cavazos said.

Haig urges Soviets to show restraint

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. called on the Soviet Union today to show new restraint in its international behavior to help set the stage for improved U.S.-Soviet relations.

"The Soviet Union must understand that it cannot succeed in dominating the world through aggression," Haig said.

Controller strike may make travel luxurious

Octavio Molina

About 12,000 former air traffic controllers across the nation are putting the pinch on the nation's airlines. Unfortunately, the media have been confusing the problem by calling the conflict a "strike." The protesters are not strikers but protesters, plain and simple. They are exemployees and thus cannot strike for a change of conditions on a job they don't have. The word should now be "protest."

A striker seeks better benefits by not working but does not lose his job. A person without a job who demonstrates is merely a protester, not a striker.

Air traffic controllers are responsible for giving the airline pilots landing instructions. Of course, I've lost my faith in anything that doesn't stay on the ground since the Chicago airport mishap in 1979 that killed more than 200 people. I'm not sticking a foot on one o' them there new-fangled airplanes. I'm land-bound just like a chicken.

With all the problems surrounding U.S. airlines today, people like me are apprehensive about flying the airlines because they feel the substitute controllers may be incompetent, incapable of getting passengers anywhere without crashing.

Rather than dwell on the bad, let's fantasize about the endless benefits of the "protest." There must be a few improvements airlines can make in the interest of good public relations.

1. Leg Room. There's plenty of it now, but there could be more. Passengers could sit in gargantuan Lazy-Boy recliners. Who knows? Maybe we could have a miniature golf course in the aisles.

2. Cargo Space. Not only will airlines transport passengers' small pets but also their BIG pets. Shamu, the killer whale, should get to fly coast-to-coast on the Peanuts Fare. One problem though - the Reagan administration, in cooperation with the airlines - might try to fool the Soviets by storing neutron bombs in the broom closets. The possibilities are endless.

3. No Smoking Area. More of the plane is converted into a nosmoking area. Smoking areas also serve as smog destablization chambers for metropolis-bound passengers. They learn how to love pollution before stepping off in Los Angeles or New York City.

4. Larger Restrooms. These restrooms include tubs and Roman baths for the uninhibited. Handy radar games let the passenger pass the time while "taking care of business."

5. Gift Shop. Each airline will carry odds and ends from all corners of the earth. Passengers never have to get off the plane to buy gifts for good ole Uncle Ed and Laura Lou in hometown USA.

6. Portable Pilot by Atari. Passenger seats are equipped with sophisticated electronic games. An artificial pilot's dashboard flashes on the back of the seat while a makeshift steering wheel lets the passenger make believe he is commanding the flight. Headphones add the sound effects of a plane rapidly losing altitude as tape recorded instructions hum from an air traffic control crew actually on the job.

Unfortunately, these PR moves may never happen. Airlines are reporting that business is returning to normal. Some airlines are reporting bookings at 80 percent or better, but insurance companies are also reporting an increase in sales of flight insurance.

Well, so much for dreams of radar games and plenty of leg room. I'll just drive my car and leave the flying to the birds.

Planning post could become thing of past

Joel Brandenberger

Since Glenn Barnett announced his resignation Monday as vice president for Planning, serious questions have arisen about Tech's present administrative structure and the future of the Office of Planning.

Barnett has served as a Tech vice president since Grover Murray was president of the university in the mid-1960s. There was a time when Barnett, as executive vice president, was the key operating officer for the university. He was arguably the most powerful vice president in Tech history.

The planning post Barnett will leave Aug. 31 began to receive more emphasis in 1976 when former Tech president Cecil Mackey moved Barnett there from the position of executive vice president. Barnett has held the job the past four years, helping plan long range construction projects.

Since current president Lauro Cavazos assumed office in 1980, Barnett has reasserted himself as a second-in-command type while continuing his planning role. However, any of the remaining vice presidents could probably act as second in command, and there is some sentiment among administrators to do away with the Planning Office.

Two telling clues have emerged in the wake of Barnett's resignation that lend credence to the notion the Office of Planning may go the way of the dinosaur.

Cavazos has said the position will remain vacant temporarily.

The way Tech has played the interim merry-go-round game since the arrival of Cavazos, it may be assumed we could have an interim replacement within a day.

If the university does without a planning officer for a week or two, it might just as easily do without a planning person for a month or two. After a while, the planning functions might be taken over by two or three other offices.

Also, with Tech just beginning to climb out of the interim cycle administratively, Barnett could have waited until October, when the Development vacancy is expected to be filled, to leave Tech with another vice president to replace.

Finally, the rumor mill that inevitably cranks up in the wake of a resignation says Barnett will not be replaced. These rumors are not always accurate, but a lot of people believe the Planning post is a thing of the past.

Those who favor abolishing the office are right. The work of the Planning Office can, and probably should be done by a group of offices. The long range planning portion of Barnett's job needs to be done by the president and his closest advisors.

Barnett has left a mark on Tech that will not be forgotten for some time to come. He took the Office of Planning and did an admirable job with it. However, the office is not going to be as useful to the university in the future. Cavazos needs to spread the duties of the Planning Office among the remaining vicepresidents, and concentrate on Tech's future himself.

Royal ceremonies all pomp, little circumstance

Russell Baker

NEW YORK - In the spring of 1953 I received a message from His Grace, the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal of England, etc., etc., etc., stating that he had been commanded by Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, etc., etc., etc., to invite my attendance at her Coronation at the Abbey at Westminster.

Thus began my first and last participation in a royal occasion. The queen's command to the Earl Marshal could not have been issued very insistently, and the Earl Marshal probably gritted his teeth before obeying, for seats in the Abbey were being sought almost as eagerly as places in Heaven.

Nevertheless, as one of the few American journalists lucky enough to draw an invitation in the scribbler's lottery, I accepted without worrying whether they really, truly, honestly wanted me.

The painstaking precision with which the British prepare their great shows extended even down to the grubbiest pub crawlers of Fleet Street. The mail brought elaborate directions about how to dress. Dress uniforms and medals were acceptable and tribal costumes were approved for persons from the more exotic realms of the Commonwealth, though not for journalists, for whom tribal uniform would have included a filthy Mackintosh and a gravystained necktie.

The dress order in my case was quite explicit: white tie, tails, top hat. As a devotee of Fred Astaire, I was familiar with this get-up, but did not own such duds and had never worn them. No matter, haberdashery-wise Londoners said, "Go to Mossbross."

Moss Bros. - or Mossbross, as it was universally known - was the most redoubtable rental clothes shop in the Empire, catering to belted earls and Fleet Street hacks alike without noticeable discrimination. For a very small sum, they provided me with a fine fit and splendid high silk hat.

Orders of increasing complexity, meanwhile, continued to pour in from the Earl Marshal. These dealt with such matters as which door of the Abbey to enter, when to make use of the specially installed toilet facilities inside the Abbey during the ceremony, and how to conduct myself while eating.

Yes, dining and toiletry had been thought of in advance, and with good reason, for the ceremony was to be a day-long ordeal. Before the gaudier arrivals of royalty and official brass began, the less dazzling hordes had to be installed handsomely in place.

My orders required me to report at 6:30 a.m. Since the serious business was not due to start until noontime or so, this meant there would be four or five hours of nothing to do but fidget.

Obediently, I arose at 4:30 in the morning and discovered a pouring rain. This was dismaying since, living only a half mile from the Abbey, I had decided to walk to the Coronation rather than decipher the incomprehensible regulations imposed on people who wanted to arrive by car.

By 5:30 it was still raining fit to launch the Ark, but I was gorgeously adorned in white tie and tails and addressing a large breakfast. At my insistence my wife, who was doomed to pass the day watching television with the benighted masses, took snapshots of me in top hat by the breakfast dishes.

During my boygood the men of my family had risen daily at this hour to start the farm chores, and I wanted photographic evidence that I, too, had once risen at this obscene hour of the night to dress like Fred Astaire.

At about 6 a.m. the downpour ceased and I bolted out of the house in bleak gray dawn, strode toward Victoria Station and turned into Victoria, the avenue leading to the Abbey. Here for the first and only moment in my life, I suddenly discovered what it was to be a star and strut upon a great stage.

When a magnificently briefed policemen, checking my assortment of passes, opened the barrier and let me stride down the center of the thoroughfare, the crowds rose from the sidewalk and began cheering. After hours and hours of wretched waiting in the downpour, they were getting their first glimpse of the great royal occasion, and they hailed me as happily as if I had been a Knight of the Garter in full

I had almost reached the Abbey before I realized what had put them in such good spirits. Then I noticed that several persons at the curb were pointing at my hand and laughing. Then I saw the light. In that hand, quite forgotten, I was lugging my lunch of two sandwiches and an orange paper bag.

The crowd loved it. Here this regular toff-top hat, white tie and all, mind you, at 6 o'clock in the morning - and he was brown-bagging the Coronation.

It felt quite wonderful to create such a stir with such democratic plainness, and in an uncharacteristec seizure of stage presence I tipped my hat again, then lifted my brown paper bag and waved it, and was washed with the sweet thunder of applause. It was a sublime moment. The rest of the day was rather long.

Children learning from Big Brother Sister program

BY HILLORI HALL UD Staff

As the school year rolls on, some students who find homework doesn't occupy all their spare time may fill those empty hours by becoming a big brother or big sister to some young child.

Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Lubbock is an organization formed to "match" a volunteer, the big brother or sister, with a child from a one-parent home or children's home. The child must be between the ages of 5 and 16.

Although the process seems to be a relatively simple one, certain guidelines are followed before the match is official. An orientation for volunteers is held, followed by a series of interviews and reference checks for volunteers ready to be matched.

The volunteers and children are required to present a list of activities and hobbies. Lists are compared to find similar interests. The volunteer and child who seem to have similar likes and dislikes are introduced for a trial match to test compatability. If the trial match is successful, the volunteer has himself a new brother or sister.

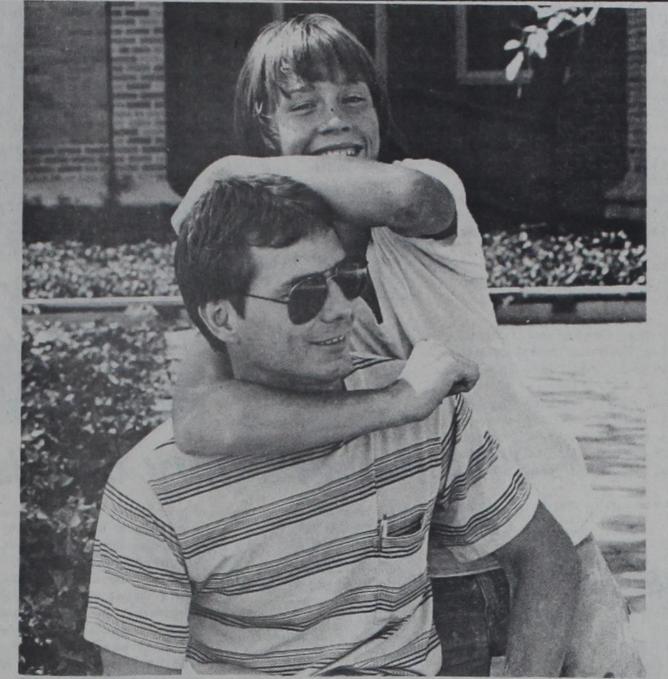

Danny McWhorter, executive director of Big Brothers-Big Sisters of Lubbock, said the match rate is 11 to 16 months, but many extend long beyond this period.

"The main reason for a match to split is if the distance between homes is too far, and sometimes just because the two don't get along," McWhorter said.

One Big Brother, Chris Barnard, and his little brother, Shane Bradberry, 15, did not have any problems getting a relationship started. Barnard and Bradberry have been together almost four years, and both feel they have learned from their relationship.

"I feel like I have gained not only a big brother, but also a whole family," Bradberry said, referring to Barnard's two-year-

Barnard said he and Bradberry spend a lot of their time together participating in sports or working together. Bradberry has worked for his big brother during the summer.

U.S. neutron weapons would be highly mobile

WASHINGTON (AP) - Neutron weapons stockpiled in the United States could be delivered to troops in Europe "only a few hours" after allies agreed to accept them in the event of a crisis, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger

The United States, therefore, will not be penalized strategically by keeping the weapons at home in recognition of European "sensitivities" to having them deployed in their countries, Weinberger said Monday.

Meanwhile, dozens of demonstrators held sitins today at the doorways of the American Embassy and five other diplomatic missions in The Hague, Neatherlands, to protest the U.S. production of the neutron weapon and the East-West nuclear arms race.

At the request of U.S. Embassy officials, police cleared the demonstrators from the steps of the mission about an hour and a half after the demonstration began at 10:20 a.m., an embassy spokeswoman said. A sit-in that shut off a back driveway was also cleared and the protesters were moved a few yards away behind crowd-

The Hague police said there also were peaceful sit-ins outside the Soviet, Italian and French embassies and inside the lobbies of the West German and Spanish embassies.

Sylvain puts roll back in rock

SYL SYLVAIN, "Syl Sylvain and the Teardrops," RCA Victor Records.

By RONNIE McKEOWN

UD Reporter Good rock 'n' roll never dies, it just gets a little hard to find from time to time.

"Syl Sylvain and the Teardrops" is good ol' rock 'n' roll, but with a name like Sylvain Sylvain, who's going to notice?

The name The New York Dolls might ring a bell. The Dolls were one of the original blitz bands of the late. '60s, dressing in plastic clothing, high heels and far-out hairdos. Sylvain was a founder of the group, which pulled a cult following from all over Sylvain, although born in Egypt, lived in New York City during his teen years. This was the basis for the street-wise rock 'n' roll lyrics Sylvain produced with the Dolls and continues to produce today.

"When you're from the street, you do a lot of crazy things just to get across," Sylvain once said in an interview with RCA Records. "You do the most entertaining, wildest things, and you get the most press out of it. We (The New York Dolls) were the only group to have the guts to try anything.'

With the Teardrops on their recent album, Sylvain has tamed his wildness quite a bit, and the end result is fun, old-sounding

Review: Album

The Teardrops include female drummer Rosie Rex and bassist Danny (Tubby) Reid. Sylvain and the band have been together since September of 1980. These musicians teamed up with keyboardist Tommy Mandel, saxophonist John Gerber and trombonist Andrew Washington on the album to recreate a variety of rock 'n' roll sounds first introduced in the '50s.

The song "Formidable," highlighted by acoustic guitar and piano, is presented with an Everly Brothers sound of harmonies

But past the goody-goody sound of the music lie lyrics of pregnancy and abortion - social-conscience lyrics of the '80s set to music of the '50s.

The song begins, "I called your mother on the telephone, She said you're pregnant and so afraid to come home, I saw a doctor the other day, and he said he could take your pain away." Phil and Don never wrote 'em like that.

The song not only presents the problem, it also solves it. Sylvain sings that he will get a job, and the lyrics continue: "If it's a boy we'll dress him up blue, and a girl will be as cute as you. Before we kill this chance of romance, don't turn your back on

None of the other songs contain such heavy lyrics, but even "Formidable" can't be considered too heavy with its lighthearted vocals and upbeat tempo. The song is not nearly as serious as the comparable Bruce Springsteen lyrics on "The

The other songs comment on the lighter sides of life, such as dancing, romance and rock 'n' roll.

"Teardrops" tells of a girl leaving singer Sylvain, whose teardrops are falling like rain. Sylvain ends the song with a love forecast, "Looks like we're in for bad weather." The song features a rocking saxophone background and a Duane Eddysounding guitar solo.

"No Dancin" is presented with a mamba sound, and the horns give the tune a Harry Belafonte effect. The rather shallow impact of the lyrics is summed up in the line, "I'm not going dancing with you.'

"Crowded Love" seems to be an autobiographical statement on Sylvain's days in the Big Apple. The lyrics, "As I wake up to a disco beat, kids are smoking out in the street" are enhanced by "Yakety Sax" backing horns.

Sylvain first found rock 'n' roll when he saw Elvis Presley's King Creole in Paris. Along with being born in Cairo, discovering rock 'n' roll in France is typical of Sylvain's musical background. After moving to Brooklyn, facing the change from riding camels to smoking them, Sylvain just doesn't seem to want to change again.

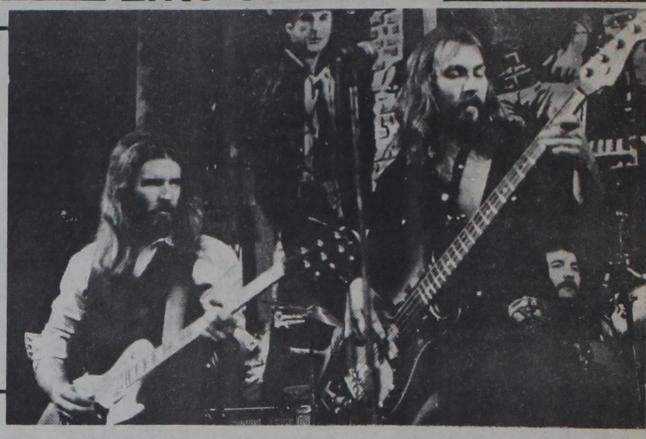

Today's rock has gone its own way, but it's still rock 'n' roll for

But is it really necessary that the victim's hand be severed? That's the question you ask yourself at the end of the bloody prologue to False Witness, the sixth novel to be published by Dorothy Uhnak, a former police detective.

You can understand the need for extreme violence in the scene that shows what happened when a beautiful black television-talk-show hostess named Sanderalee Dawson went out jogging late one night, encountered another runner somewhere along the way, brought him back to her elegant mid-Manhatten apartment and was raped and beaten to within a breath or two of her death.

You can understand why there has to be all that blood on Rose's bid for a piece of baseball history, applauded, cheered and screamed as if it were New Year's Eve in Times Square.

Rose's night was capped by a call from President Reagan, who congratulated the Philadelphia Phillies' first baseman and complimented him for bringing baseball back in style.

Reagan, of course, was talking about opening night for baseball's second season after a 50-day players' strike and more than a week of preparing for the resumption of play.

Cardinals' pitcher Mark Littell, who admitted his adrenalin was flowing a little more than usual Monday night, was stoic about giving up the historymaking hit.

"That's baseball," he said. "He was destined to get a hit and it came off Mark Littell. It was an inside fastball. He hit a good pitch. Of course, he's a

When Rose collected the big hit, 3,631 balloons were released. The Phillies' bench emptied as the players raced to first base to congratulate Rose.

Rose said he didn't seem to have the usual snap in his bat.

It could have been because he drove home from the All-Star Game in Cleveland with his son, Petey, and a friend, and didn't arrive in Philadelphia until 10

Rose said that when he came up in the eighth inning, he could read the disappointment on the face of his son, who was acting as honorary bat boy.

Before heading to the plate he told the boy, "Watch this time. I'm going to get a base hit".

He then slashed Littell's second pitch in the shortstop hole and into left field. From there, it was bedlam.

What is a "Copicard"

The COPICARD utilizes a card which is magnetically encoded with any desired value. The card is then inserted into the card reader which in turn activates the copier while the value left on the card is displayed for the user. As the user makes copies, the proper value is deducted from the card until the card value reaches zero, at which point the card will simply cease to function. This value can be one of a number of different values stored in the machine. Hence, you can charge different individuals, or departments, different amounts for the copies they make.
