Fee advisory committee recommends allocations

By CHRIS BOBBITT
The University Daily

The Texas Tech Student Services Fee Advisory Committee has allocated a recommended total of more than $4 million to 26 campus services this year.

"It (the allocation process) is a very time-consuming kind of a thing," said Robert Ewalt, vice president for student affairs. "The students do a good job of working with this. There is a lot of money involved, and it takes a lot of time and effort to go through all of those budgets and to try and deal fairly with everybody."

"They try to take a look at what kind of money is available, and they try to take a look at the services being provided. They raise a lot of questions about how the activities are doing, the student response and what kind of things the students like and don't like."

The Student Association president appoints the committee, consisting of eight students; Ewalt; Judith Henry, dean of students; and the SA president, who presides as chairperson.

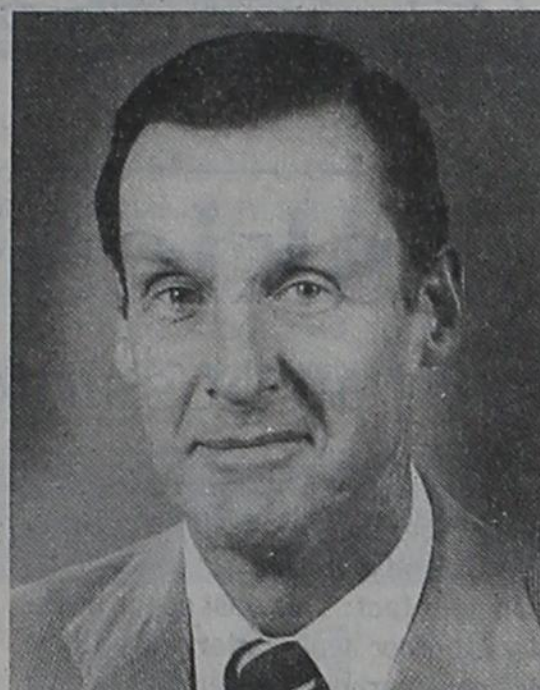

The committee receives budget requests around the first of February. It conducts a series of hearings with the services to discuss the requests. The committee, following the hearings, discusses and decides the recommendation for the fees to be allocated.

The advisory committee makes the recommendation to the Board of Regents, and the board approves the allocations.

The money the committee uses to fund student services comes from student services fees, the amount students pay when they register, based on semester hours.

The recommended amount allocated to services will increase the current fee of $78.50 to about $82 for full-time students. State legislation set up for state schools sets a maximum amount for student services fees at $90.

"The fee is set up on the basis of credit hours," Ewalt said. The Student Services Fee Advisory Committee has allocated funds to

Orem lashes out at animal rights activists

By AMY LAWSON
The University Daily

John Orem, a Texas Tech physiology professor, said at a conference Wednesday that he was the victim of a premeditated attack by animal rights activists and still is the victim nine months after the incident.

Orem spoke at a symposium titled, "Conflicts of the '90s: The Siege by Animal Rights Activists," about a break-in at the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center last summer and the corresponding attack against him. The event was sponsored by Tech, the Health Sciences Center and the Texas Society for Biomedical Research.

The Animal Liberation Front (ALF), which claimed responsibility for the act, broke into Orem's lab July 4. ALF vandalized the lab and stole research documents and laboratory animals.

"We were quick to respond," Orem said. "By the night of the fourth, the president of this university, and he had only been on the job one day, the vice president of the Health Sciences Center, the chair of the animal care and use committee and I — we all had prepared statements and they were to be delivered at 10 a.m. on the following morning, the morning of July 5."

"As it was, the statements that we had prepared turned out to be the lesser news," Orem said. "PETA (People for Ethical Treatment of Animals) faxed all the local media their news release accusing me of, and I quote, 'gruesome, despicable, wasteful and barbarously cruel experiments.' This news release was in the hands of the press before the scheduled 10 a.m. press conference, and naturally we were questioned about the accusatory contents. So even before I was publicly the victim, I became publicly the accused."

In a written statement, Orem said the attack was carried out in many forms — a press release accusing him of unspeakable crimes against animals, a statewide demonstration against him and a massive write-in campaign to the National Institute of Health and to the university. Orem said Tech has received more than 5,000 letters in response to the write-in campaign.

"This was the beginning of a wellorchestrated attack meant to discredit me, the work I have done and to drive me out of science," the statement said.

Career center helps ensure employment

By CHRIS BOBBITT
The University Daily

Early consideration of future career plans will ensure successful employment opportunities, said David Kraus, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The center, located in 335 West Hall, provides student services including interviews with prospective companies, guidance on career opportunities and internships, Kraus said.

Between 400 and 600 companies come to Texas Tech and conduct more than 12,000 student interviews, he said. Companies contact the office and place requests for students in certain majors.

"Employers have been very pleased with Tech students," he said.

Part of the planning aspect of the center includes a library which maintains directories and videos on different companies and careers, Kraus said.

Students can find information about education standards and the employment outlook for particular career fields.

"If a student knows what he or she wants to do, they can use for example, a directory that lists companies within an area where that student chooses to be located," he said.

the Career Planning and Placement Center is a resource for students nearing graduation, Kraus said.

"Our feeling is that students need to be thinking about career plans and what they plan on doing for the rest of their life very early in their college career," he said, "and not wait until their senior year."

"Students should realize that the center encourages students whether they are graduating seniors or even freshman to utilize our services," he said.

The center, which posts various job bulletins regardless of a student's major, conducts seminars and workshops each semester on topics including resume writing, job interview preparation and job-search strategies, he said.

Although interviewers focus on graduating students, the center has services for continuing students as well.

The Placement Center houses the System of Interactive Guidance and Information (SIGI), a computerized career guidance system.

"The system helps students who aren't quite sure what they want to do," he said, "or they're not sure how their interests and abilities match up with the real world."

Efird chosen as UD editor for 1990-91 school year

By CINDY PANDOLFO
The University Daily

Junior LeAnna Efird was selected Wednesday night as editor of The University Daily for the 1990-91 academic year.

Efird, a journalism major from Childress, competed for the editor's position against junior journalism major Francisco Rodriguez, who is from Ciudad Mante, Tamaulipas, Mexico.

The two candidates interviewed with the 12-member student publications committee for the editor's position.

Efird said her goals for the 1990-91 academic year include improving the readability of The University Daily, providing better campus coverage and encouraging reader input.

"It is an honor to be chosen as editor, to have the opportunity to improve the paper and to serve as a student leader of the Texas Tech campus," Efird said. "I want to encourage students to become more involved in campus issues. Students should let The University Daily staff know what they want from their student newspaper."

Efird's goals also include broader coverage of campus events and organizations.

"The University Daily is a paper for students by students and should cover more of the events that students are involved in," she said.

Efird

Efird joined The University Daily staff in 1988 as an apprentice. She served as an academics and political reporter in the 1989 spring semester. During the 1989-90 academic year, Efird served as a political reporter before assuming her current position as copy editor.

Efird, who also will serve as summer editor of The UD in 1990, said she plans to expand lifestyles coverage during the summer months to provide students attending summer school more leisure time information.

Efird will begin the process of selecting a staff for the coming year in April.

Forensics specialist displays art of reconstruction

By MELISSA SHARP
The University Daily

Describing criminals to forensic artists for composite drawings can be therapeutic for victims, forensic artist Karen Taylor of the Texas Department of Public Safety said Wednesday at an Anthropological Society lecture.

"It's the first opportunity they have to get back at this person who has caused them such misery," she said. "It gives them a lot of satisfaction. Usually, they leave my office pleased with what they have done."

Taylor said she is critical of her work even when the subjects are identified.

"When I see the results, I always see the mistakes," she said. "Everybody else is saying we got him, it looks great. But I look at it and see the errors and hopefully learn from each case."

Taylor said forensic art also is used in identification of bodies with facial damage. Reconstructive drawing, she said, provides sketches of victims from skeletal remains.

She showed a slide of the skull of John Merrick, the elephant man, to prove that all skulls are not alike.

"You think all skulls look alike if you're not in the anthropology business," Taylor said. "After awhile, you learn that they are very, very different when you get into the work I'm in."

In reconstructing facial features,

Taylor said forensic artists have set formulas. From skulls, they can identify a person's race and sex, she said. Taylor said once the race and sex of a victim is identified, formulas exist to determine the amount of fat and skin that was on the skull.

She said forensic artists also can aid in the location of children who have been missing for years by sketching them as they would appear now.

Speaker asks Legislature to consider state lottery

By The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Speaker Gib Lewis has directed a House committee to examine a state lottery as a money-making tool for lawmakers struggling to reform the public school finance system.

The Texas Legislature on Wednesday ended a 30-day special session on school finance and judicial election reform without sending legislation to Gov. Bill Clements on either issue. Legislators return for another special session Monday.

The Senate in 1986 approved a proposed constitutional amendment to create a state lottery, but such measures have died in the House. A two-thirds vote of the 150-member House and 31-member Senate is required to put a constitutional amendment before voters.

Lewis told the House State Affairs Committee to make a "full and complete" examination of the lottery as a source of state revenue. Supporters have said a mature lottery would yield $600 million per year in revenue for Texas.

A state lottery has been an issue in the race for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

State Treasurer Ann Richards, who is facing Attorney General Jim Mattox in an April 10 run-off for the Democratic nod, said she recently encouraged Lewis to move forward on the lottery. Mattox has used the campaign slogan "Lottery — Yes, Income Tax — No."

Lewis also has directed the House Appropriations, Ways and Means, and Public Education committees to review state expenditures and revenue sources and to have their findings ready for the House.

Lawmakers are working to answer a Texas Supreme Court ruling that the school finance system is unconstitutional.
