Combest: budget plan will hit West Texas farm districts hard

By The Associated Press

LUBBOCK — U.S. Rep. Larry Combest said Monday the federal budget reduction plan to be signed into action by President Bush will cut the heart out of sprawling farm districts in West Texas.

"We are going to be hit very hard out here. That is the reason I voted against it," Combest, R-Texas, said Monday. "It very strongly gets into our back pocket in terms of revenues without providing any additional incentives."

Combest joined the seven other House Republicans from Texas and GOP Texas Senator Phil Gramm in voting against the budget.

Combest said he voted for the

"It very strongly gets into our back pocket in terms of revenues without providing any additional incentives."

—Larry Combest

original budget compromise rejected by the House several weeks ago, but said the new budget agreement varied too much from that plan by calling for more tax hikes and fewer cuts in spending.

The agreement reached by Congress after months of debate will hit the rolling fields of West Texas with $11 billion worth of cuts in agriculture programs over the next five years.

An increase in the federal gasoline tax from nine to 14 cents beginning Dec. 1 will impact thousands of farmers in the West Texas plains, who use fuel intensive equipment to cultivate a bevy of crops, including 25 percent of the nation's cotton crop.

"The target prices are frozen. They will not reduce below their current levels," said Combest, who is running unopposed in the South Plains' 19th District. "I have always felt like you don't necessarily set a good farm program by how much you are going to spend. "Much of the time, the two main in-redients are what kind of a policy does it set and good weather," he told a news conference. "We have been fortunate under the current farm program to have some good weather, so we tried to start with the same structure."

Combest said despite the cuts in agriculture, there are incentives for the hundreds of energy-related businesses in West Texas.

"We will obviously be a benefactor because we are a large energy producing district. That will be helpful to us," Combest says.

Those oil and gas incentives include:

- A two-year extension of the Section 29 non-conventional fuels tax credit of $3 per barrel equivalent and an expansion of the credit to so-called tight-sands natural gas prevalent in West Texas.

- An extension until the turn of the century of the tax breaks for the production of ethanol, a corn product blended with gasoline to form gasohol.

- A new 15 percent enhanced oil recovery tax credit for certain capital costs involved in tertiary oil production.

- Expansions of oil depletion allowances totaling $278 million over the next five years.

Combest said the 1990 Farm Bill which passed during the last three weeks of the lawmaking session is designed to contain costs and address environmental concerns.

"The foundation of the Farm Bill is the same," Combest said.

Tech prof to attend ODA symposium

By TARA MULDRON
The University Daily

France Telecom, the French Standards Institute and the French Computer Savant Society selected a Texas Tech associate professor to attend a symposium in Paris on Nov. 14 and 15.

Kathleen Hennessey, associate professor of the Institute for Studies of Organizational Automation, and two representatives from IBM Corp. will comprise the United States delegation to the First International Symposium on Office Document Architecture.

Boeing Co. and Xerox Corp. nominated Hennessey to attend the symposium due to her contributions to Office Document Architecture, a standard format for document representation in different computer programs.

"Office document architecture will save the U.S. commerce billions of dollars," Hennessey said.

The new ODA system will cut paperwork for various types of businesses, such as banks, supermarkets and manufacturers, by providing uniform computer documentation programs.

"People with degrees, such as engineers, spend most of their time dealing with paperwork," she said. "ODA will allow professionals to become even more productive."

"Any company that has documents that they need to transfer through networks could use this program," she said. "ODA would be useful for banks, especially when they need to transfer documents from one bank to another, and supermarkets need it to transfer inventory information," she said.

Interchanging, retrieving and handling electronic documents are primary objectives for information and telecommunication architectures of companies in the future, she said.

Hennessey and her colleagues began working on ODA in 1984, then named Interface, through a grant of about $100,000 from Xerox Corp.

Contributors to the ODA proposal from the Tech Institute for Studies of Organizational Automation include Hennessey and R. Katragadda. S. Taque of Sun Microsystems Inc. in Mountain View, Calif., and K.S. Hahn of Hyundai Industrial Electronics in Korea provided additional material to the proposal.

Hennessey

PASS West offers academic services

By LORI TUCCI
The University Daily

PASS West, a new division of the Programs for Academic Support Services, offers extended academic services for all students at Texas Tech.

Opened earlier this month, PASS West is located north of the dining hall in the Wiggins complex. The PASS office is located in 205 West Hall.

"We wanted to have a place closer for students who live in dorms such as Weymouth, Chitwood and Coleman to go to for help rather than West Hall where PASS is located," said Judy Stocks, director of PASS.

"PASS West provides longer working hours than PASS does. This gives students more time to get the help they need," she said.

The services offered are similar at both locations. Video recorders, audio equipment and information about freshman and sophomore level classes are available. Anyone is welcome to use the services or use the offices for study areas.

Groups and workshops are still available at PASS. However, these programs will not be available at PASS West because the new center will be concentrating more on individual help.

The Office of Housing and Dining Services, which funds the new center, pays for renovations as well as personnel services. PASS provides the study materials, and the services are free to students due to student service fees paid at registration.

"We (PASS personnel) are real excited about the opening of PASS West because we are now able to help students with classes as well as tutoring for the TASP test without having them walk across campus, especially late at night," Stocks said.

Graduate student Jeff Mollhagen will work at PASS West along with two student assistants. These students will act as a link between the two centers ensuring success at both locations.

PASS West is open 4 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. on Fridays and noon to 4 p.m. on Saturdays. For more information on the new center and its location, call 742-3763.

A reporter's roundtable will be broadcast at 8 p.m.

300 French take flight from Iraq to Paris today

By The Associated Press

An Iraqi Airways jetliner carrying about 300 French citizens left Baghdad for Paris today on a flight that ended their grueling hostage ordeal.

The French Foreign Ministry said the Boeing 747 departed at about 12:30 p.m. EST and would be in Paris by midnight local time if all went smoothly.

The ministry also said that French diplomats had been ordered to pull out of their embassy in Kuwait, where they had endured siege-like conditions for weeks. The half-dozen diplomats were expected to return to Paris with the freed hostages, but there was no immediate official word as to whether they were on the plane when it flew into Baghdad from Kuwait with 57 French people aboard.

That group was joined by more than 200 waiting at the Baghdad airport.

An unknown number of the more than 300 French hostages in Iraq and Kuwait chose to remain behind, French officials said. The Greek government said 10 Greek nationals who had been held in Iraq also boarded the flight for Paris.

"I can say now that all French citizens who wanted to go home have gone home," French charge d'affaires Andre Janier said in Baghdad.

Daniel Bernard, the Foreign Ministry spokesman, confirmed

France will honor Iraq's demand to fill the plane with a cargo of medicine for the return flight.

Medicine is excluded from the U.N. embargo of Iraq and occupied Kuwait.

As the hostages left today, the U.N. Security Council in New York debated a resolution holding Iraq liable for human rights abuses, war damages and economic losses caused by its invasion of Kuwait. The council president, British Ambassador Sir David Hannay, predicted approval.

President Francois Mitterrand of France cautioned against celebration as long as hundreds of Westerners remain captive in Iraq and Kuwait.

"I express the joy of all the French people to those coming home," Mitterrand said. "But we will rejoice fully only when the other hostages can return to their own countries."

Mitterrand spoke at a news conference outside Paris with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev after the signing of a Franco-Soviet cooperation treaty.

Gorbachev said Iraqi President Saddam Hussein should not expect a split in the international alliance opposed to Iraq's Aug. 2 seizure of Kuwait.

"We must not permit the Iraqi regime to hope there will be a division, a weakening of positions," Gorbachev said. He called Iraq's use of hostages "amoral."

Non-Communists score one-sided win in Georgia

By The Associated Press

TBILISI, U.S.S.R. — Non-Communist parties won elections in Georgia on a platform calling for independence from the Soviet Union, private ownership of land and a capitalist economy, officials said Monday.

"We are certainly going to have a majority in parliament," said Zviad Gamsakhurdia, leader of the victorious Round Table-Free Georgia bloc of political parties.

With about 90 percent of the regions reporting, Gamsakhurdia claimed victory in about 70 percent.

He protested what he called "gross violations" of the election law and said Communist authorities "terrorized the non-Georgian population" along the borders of the mountainous southern republic, which is dotted with pockets of Azerbaijani and other ethnic groups.

A member of the central election commission, Alexander Kobalia, said that preliminary results showed a slightly less sweeping victory for Gamsakhurdia's Round Table, with the bloc winning about 60 percent of the vote versus 30 percent for the Communist Party.

The final results will be ready on Wednesday, and a runoff will be held for close races on Nov. 11, he said.

No date has been set yet for convening the Georgian Supreme Soviet legislature, which is expected to declare independence from the Soviet Union.

Among the 15 Soviet republics, all but Kirgizia have declared some form of sovereignty or independence.

Gamsakhurdia said he was unable to specify what his first proposal would be in parliament. "I can't decide that alone," said Gamsakhurdia, an imposing 51-year-old with a history of arrests and opposition to Communist rule dating back to the 1950s.

Another Round Table spokesman, Georgi Makaridze, said the victory would translate into about 120 seats in the 250-member Supreme Soviet. "Along with other non-Communist parties, we will have a working majority in parliament."

Tech gets 'asleep at the wheel' grant

By TARA MULDRON
The University Daily

Falling asleep at the wheel has plagued most drivers on the road, and it sometimes results in traffic fatalities.

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation granted the Tech civil engineering department $99,000 to study means of decreasing automobile accidents on Texas highways due to drivers falling asleep.

"I think everybody can relate to this problem. You drive along the highway for a long distance, set the cruise control and eventually begin to nod off," said Warren Wray, chairman of civil engineering.

"These are the types of accidents in which many times there is no explainable reason why the accidents occurred," he said.

"The accidents are generally attributed to the driver falling asleep, becoming hypnotized or some other outside influence such as drugs or alcohol," Wray said.

Other states sponsored studies dealing with accidents due to drowsy drivers, but Tech is the first Texas university to receive funding from the SDHPT to research the problem.

Within a 20-mile stretch of road on Interstate 10 between Junction and Odessa, 12 fatalities occurred last year due to drivers falling asleep. The highway has an average daily traffic count of 3,000.

"We want to see what we can do to prevent accidents occurring on highways such as the ones near Odessa," he said.

The SDHPT restricts the study to rural, four-lane divided highways. The department currently researches more than 400,000 accidents.

Other states attempted to decrease the number of accidents by various methods of altering roads. Surface treatments such as road buttons, indentations in the pavement, grooves and ridges eliminate some of the accidents, but they also create other problems.

"There are high maintenance problems. Grooves fill up with soil and debris, thus eliminating the effectiveness. Raised ridges, such as buttons and jogglebars (ceramic tiles along the shoulder of the road), create problems in areas of the state where snowmobile operations are performed," Wray said.

"Motorcyclists and bicyclists frequently complain about the roughness of altered roads," he said.

Wray and his colleagues will create road simulations on a mainframe computer. The studies will establish predictive models which SDHPT will use on Texas roads.

New Jersey first altered roads to arouse drowsy drivers in the mid 1950s. Other states followed, but none of the attempted methods worked well, he said.

Ian Taylor/The University Daily

The United States Department of Transportation will begin accepting bids for an automobile simulator in January.

Texas A&M and the University of Texas at Austin will assist Tech in a proposal for the simulator. The simulator will aid researchers in preventing accidents due to drivers falling asleep at the wheel.

The department of transportation limits the applicants to university campuses with medical schools.

"It would be very beneficial to Tech to obtain the simulator," Wray said.

Tech's program of researching accidents began Sept. 15. The SDHPT grant provides funds through August 1991.

President's veto of civil rights bill questionable

Tom Wicker
Columnist

Who would have thought that a pedigreed Connecticut Yankee, educated at Andover and Yale, would dabble in white backlash?

But what other plausible explanation can there be for George Bush's veto of the first civil rights bill to come across his presidential desk?

If Bush really believed that he was vetoing a "quota bill," he had to ignore impressive testimony — easily a preponderance of the evidence — to the contrary, and not just from the women and racial minorities who would have benefited from the measure's anti-discrimination provisions.

If, however, Bush reasoned that he and his party would get greater political mileage from the rebuff a veto would deal to affirmative action programs and their beneficiaries, he had plenty of shabby precedent.

He was, for instance, in the footsteps of Ronald Reagan, who also vetoed a civil rights bill (only to suffer a rare override by Congress).

Bush attempted to put a gloss of legal respectability on his veto, claiming that the bill's "new and very technical rules of litigation" would make it too difficult for employers to defend themselves against charges of discrimination.

In this tortured reasoning, they would be forced to adopt employment quotas to avoid being hauled into court.

Let Bush tell that to the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'Rith, an organization that knows something about quotas and has been on the front lines in the fight against them.

The vetoed act "simply is not a quota bill," said Thomas Homburger, the chairman of the League's civil rights committee.

Or let Bush try to convince perhaps the most prominent black Republican, William T. Coleman, the secretary of transportation in the Ford administration. Coleman supported the vetoed bill.

So did the highest-ranking black in Bush's own administration, Secretary of Health and Human Services Louis Sullivan.

The president showed his hand before it wielded the veto. His threats forced backers of the congressional bill — including not a few Republicans — to modify it to meet administration objections.

The legislators went a long way to do so but in the end they could compromise no further without stripping the bill of its effectiveness.

That was what Bush really demanded, as he then made clear with his own proposal.

It was a substitute bill that was dead on arrival in Congress because it so blatantly retreated from the hard-won civil rights gains of minorities and women.

By some interpretations, the Bush substitute would have outlawed affirmative action programs, even those approved in federal court.

Yet the original congressional bill was designed primarily to reverse six restrictive Supreme Court decisions that had made it more difficult for plaintiffs to win discrimination suits.

One of these decisions (Wards Cove) overturned established law dating to 1971 and an opinion written by Chief Justice Warren Burger.

Burger's opinion had placed the burden of proof in discrimination suits on the party best able to show that the procedures at issue were fair and necessary — the employer.

The Wards Cove decision was an about-face; it placed the burden of proof on an employee who charged discrimination.

Thus Bush's veto of a bill to restore formerly established law not only supports judicial "legislating," in violation of all his protestations about strict construction.

It clearly opts to protect employers rather than to give victims of discrimination a chance to recover — a deliberate choice that presidential rhetoric about "quotas" was designed to obscure.

The rhetoric didn't quite do the job.

The Washington Post quoted R. Marc Nettle of the Republican National Congressional Committee, for example, as saying that the political effect of the veto would be to help stop sharp Republican political losses from the current budget debate.

The veto, he said, revived "our theme of individual freedom versus government intervention."

Read Bush's lips: a veto politically aimed, perhaps politically effective. But the weight of legal testimony overwhelms the president's protestations and quota-talk and casts his veto in familiar and unpleasant tones.

The action may not have been so blatant nor the words so crass as the open appeals to white backlash that were commonplace in the '60s and '70s.

But plenty of Americans will get Bush's message as clearly as they received the one George Wallace used to send.

Jerusalem mayor remains optimistic during continuing problems, turmoil

Flora Lewis
Columnist

PARIS — If there's a living soul who embodies the city of Jerusalem, it's Teddy Kollek. This is a lament for the city, and for him because he has made his life's work trying to revive it, beautify it and bring it harmony.

But it has wrenched itself apart in fear, hatred and violence. Not that Teddy weeps; it isn't his way. He still storms around, tongue-lashing the arrogant and the fanatic, crowing delight at the greenery, the great art and music brought to give warmth to the old stones and the hopes they symbolize.

Teddy — everyone calls him that — has been mayor since 1965. When he was first elected, there was a high tin wall next to his office in the Municipal Building, a shield to protect people in the streets from snipers on the Old City walls nearby.

After the 1967 war, all the physical barriers were torn down. Teddy plunged into ceaseless activity to unite the city, if not in friendship — that was too much to ask — at least in mutual acceptance and neighborliness.

For a long time, Jerusalem was a virtual island of calm as waves of bloody anger rose around it. That was not to happenstance. Teddy, who is known for falling asleep on public occasions, habitually spent only three or four hours a night in bed so he could look after the hospitals and schools and parks he was building, visit all kinds of people, deliver his message of good will and try to make amends for provocation.

It wasn't surprising that when the government of Israel refused to receive a United Nations delegation after the recent killings on the Temple Mount, Teddy's was the one voice saying he would be glad to see anyone who wanted to talk to him. His is a voice of reason. "The world is a better place when moderates run it," he has said.

He was born in Vienna in 1911 and joined a Zionist youth group as a teen-ager. He undertook clandestine missions around Europe to help save Jews from Hitler, settling in Palestine in 1935 as a pioneer. As an aide to David Ben-Gurion, who became Israel's first prime minister when the state was founded in 1948, he was closely involved in the dreams and pains of its creation.

He never did well in national politics. He is too blunt, too demanding and straightforward, too attentive to the details of everyday human troubles to get on with the party apparatus, as Israel's unwieldy system requires for advancement. But the same qualities brought him such personal admiration and affection that he has always been re-elected mayor.

It was not without constant quarrels. Nationalists say he does too much for Arabs. He bemoans constraints on attending to their needs as fellow citizens. Worried about “Nationalists say he does too much for Arabs. He bemoans constraints on attending to their needs as fellow citizens. Worried about youth gangs, he multiplied diversions — festivals, sports to keep young people busy. But when he wanted to build a municipal swimming pool, he was called 'too Hellenistic.'” youth gangs, he multiplied diversions — festivals, sports to keep young people busy. But when he wanted to build a municipal swimming pool, he was called "too Hellenistic."

Still, it worked for a time. As late as last year, only one Palestinian had been killed in Jerusalem while hundreds died in the occupied territories, and the police had never fired live ammunition at rioters. Now the toll is mounting.

The ranks of die-hard fundamentalists are growing on both sides. Meron Benvenisti, his former deputy mayor who parted ways with his boss years ago over Teddy's insistence on looking at the bright side, has called him a "hero of tragedy."

But he also pointed out, "Jerusalem isn't a piece of real estate, it's a symbol for both sides, and symbols are indivisible and exclusive. The Palestinians aren't looking for good government, they're after a political identity, self esteem, their own flag. If you think they'll settle for better sewers and roads, you're mad."

Teddy refuses to despair. Undermined, saddened, he seeks reason for consolation. From the telephone in his car as he raced about, he told me: "It's been a bad few weeks. But fewer people have been killed in Jerusalem than in other cities this size. I hear (New York's) Mayor Dinkins is talking about a curfew to control crime. Of course it's different; here it's nationalism and there it's crime."

He's still finding practical ways to improve the city's life on both sides of the emotional divide. There's no question, he said, of a big new settlement for Soviet immigrants in East Jerusalem, as the Israeli government suggested. He's planning 7,000 new apartments for Arab housing.

"We're all in a bad mood now. But we all know there's no choice, we'll be together forever."

But it isn't going that way. Teddy will be 80 in May. "It's a different generation, they aren't heard," another Israeli commented. Not only the story of Teddy's life will seem vain if another generation fails to join his endless work for a Jerusalem at peace.

Bike paths solution for 'ped-ophiles'

To The Editor:

It's obvious Ross Crabtree and the other ped-ophiles have never ridden a bike through campus. They've never known the feeling of wind through their moussed hair or the nervous glances of unsuspecting pedestrians as bikes dangerously fly by. Bikes on campus — a ticking timebomb of spoked death!

In an article dated 10-25-90 proclaiming the dangers of bikes on campus, no positive solutions were suggested. Maybe like, gee, uh, bike paths? But no, that would rob us of Carol of Lights funds or Casino Night. Instead, threats of police action hung overhead; fines, handcuffs, jail time, prison camps full of sidewalk bikers learnin' the joys of bustin' rocks. Ahhhh!

To Mr. Crabtree, I suggest pushing legislation through the Student Senate for funding of bike paths. You'll find most first-rate universities have some variation of bike paths on campus. Let's make quality of life for students on campus not just another hollow survey question.

Who will care?

To The Editor:

In response to Richard Dressman's letter in 10/24/90 The University Daily, I would like to ask him what he would do with 20 million more unwanted people on this planet? Who would feed and care for these 20 million people? Who would pay for them? Would he?

Ike & Tina Turner, The Byrds voted into rocker hall of fame

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Impressions, Ike and Tina Turner, Wilson Pickett, the Byrds and six others are being inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, officials announced Monday.

They will be inducted at a banquet at the Waldorf-Astoria on Jan. 16, said Ahmet Ertegun, head of Atlantic Records and chairman of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Foundation Inc.

In the early-influences category, the single inductee is Howlin' Wolf, who died in 1976. Wolf wrote "Sitting on Top of the World," popularized by the group Cream.

To be inducted in the artists category are:

- The Impressions, whose songs included "Gypsy Woman" and "People Get Ready." Original members Curtis Mayfield and Jerry Butler went on to solo success.

- Ike and Tina Turner, best remembered for the remake of "Proud Mary."
- La Vern Baker, best known for a string of pop and rhythm and blues hits in the 1950s and 1960s.
- The Byrds, a popular group of the 1960s that had such hits as "Mr. Tambourine Man" and "Eight Miles High."
- John Lee Hooker, an influential guitarist.
- Wilson Pickett, who recorded "In the Midnight Hour."
- Jimmy Reed, whose song "Baby What You Want Me to Do," was recorded by Elvis Presley.

Dojcinovic

Guitarist speaks international language of music

By CRISSE McMENNAMY
The University Daily

Of all the idioms used to communicate, music transcends all barriers of language and is understood, at least in some form, by everyone.

Whether it's the symphony orchestra of Czechoslovakia, un viejo tocando la guitarra en una esquina de Mexico or a 73-year-old woman sporting a bee-hive hairdo playing "Big Balls in Cowtown" on the accordion, the purpose of music is universal — to express an idea without the limitations of language.

Although he speaks only two languages, his native Yugoslavian and English, Uros Dojcinovic has conversed with audiences of different nations in the language of his guitar. Limited only by the composers' intentions, Dojcinovic said he tries to focus on creative interpretation.

"If you think about it, we are very much limited with the music that we play. We must obey the rules set by the composer, such as notes and rhythms," Dojcinovic said. "The only thing we can do to escape this is to make our own creations inside of those limits. It's very important to have something to say with an original personality."

From Singapore to Peru, Dojcinovic has performed throughout the world. Residents of the Hub City will have the chance to join his audiences when he plays at 8:15 p.m. to day in the UC Allen Theatre. Tickets for the performance are $5 for students and $7 for non-students.

After giving his first solo performance at the age of eight, Dojcinovic is no stranger to the art world. His father is a painter in Yugoslavia, and his uncle is a violin professor. Dojcinovic, however, credits his decision to play the guitar on something beyond familial influence.

"I chose guitar because I think it has a fantastic sound possibility. It's like when a writer writes something, you never think of whether the pen or pencil used was nice. Instead, you focus on what was done with it," Dojcinovic said. "The only problem that I know of with the guitar is that it's not a very loud sound, and that is why we do not have them in symphonic orchestras."

Post-season on mind of 21-2 Tech

By BELLE MILLER
The University Daily

For Texas Tech volleyball coach Mike Jones, the hope of winning the Southwest Conference may have been stripped by Texas, but the thought of seeing post-season NCAA tournament play remains a distinct possibility.

The Red Raiders stand 21-2 overall and 5-2 in league games after a three-game match win against Baylor on Saturday.

With eight matches left in the season, Jones and his squad are looking for three more conference wins and the chance to be invited to play in the NCAA tourney in December.

"Texas is going to get first place in the conference, but we still want to have a chance to get into post-season play," Jones said at his weekly press conference on Monday.

Jones said the remaining games are important because should Tech lose to a team that is not ranked, it may hurt its chances for post-season play.

"The region we are in is not the strongest one, it's the weakest one," Jones said. "I don't think we can afford to fall down and stumble against someone we should beat."

"We want to be 29-2 so they can't say 'Well, hey you lost to a lesser team and now you can't get in.'"

Jones said he knows if the team should win their last eight matches, they will receive their invitation to a post-season tournament.

"We are controlling our own destiny," Jones said. "We don't have to worry about anybody beating someone else or someone having to lose for us to have a chance."

"If we win our next eight then we're going to get in."

Jones said the team is starting to work on more team-oriented skills such as playing better team defense.

"We are trying to add in a couple of new sets that are a little bit deceptive," Jones said. "They are just some little tricks that are no big deal, but hopefully add a little diversity to what we are already doing."

Jones said he has been pleased with how his team has responded to the tough competition they have faced this season. He said the team has a tendency to play better against the tougher teams.

"When you play teams like Baylor who are 5-21, it's just hard to tell your team to get excited about those kind of people."

"In volleyball we have a lot of matches and you just can't keep doing that over and over because pretty soon you run out of that."

The Raiders face Texas A&M, who is now 12-14 overall and 2-4 in conference play, Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Student Recreation Center before traveling to El Paso for the Texas-El Paso Tournament on Friday and Saturday.

"That's (the match against the Aggies) a very important match for us. They have played us just about as well as anybody has all year. I have a feeling they are going to be coming in really going after us."

A&M has an inconsistent record away from College Station and G. Rollie White as they are posting a 2-11 on-the-road record.

Tech, who is heading into Thursday's match having won three straight matches, beat the Aggies in a four-game match Oct. 10, 15-10, 11-15, 17-15 and 15-10.

Senior setter Sheila Solomon is Tech's Whataburger Player of the Week.

Solomon had 66 assists and 29 digs last week. This is the second time this season Solomon has been named Player of the Week.
