Biology department hosts research project

By JULIE COLLINS
The University Daily

The Texas Tech biology department is hosting an eight-week educational program designed to give scholastic graduating seniors from across the country the opportunity to study various research projects around the campus, such as biology and engineering, said Jim Burns, chairman of biological sciences.

The educational program is sponsored by the Clark Foundation of Dallas and will enable Tech to maintain the program for three years, he said.

"We have been given $140,000 from the Clark Foundation for research at Tech. Students involved in the program must have a SAT score of 1,400," Burns said.

Twenty-two students are participating in the program, he said, with half of the students entering college in the fall and the other half completing their senior year of high school in the fall.

The program received more than 500 inquiries and approximately 200 applicants from across the country. At the end of the program, every student will have their research published in various academic journals related to their individual field of study, Burns said.

Micheal San Francisco, assistant professor of biology at Tech, said the program gives scholastic students the opportunity to pursue various research projects of interest.

"The program gives exceptionally bright students the opportunity to research and learn things that otherwise, due to financial reasons, couldn't be learned," San Francisco said.

San Francisco also said the program is good publicity for Tech's biology research department.

"When undergraduates or graduate students look around for a college to attend, maybe with the help of the research project, Tech will be one of those options," San Francisco said.

Currently, San Francisco, in conjunction with Benny Wang, one of the Clark Foundation recipients from Alabama, is conducting research in the field of microbiology.

During the eight-week program, the team will study the ability of various micro-organisms to distinguish between living on plants and living in the soil.

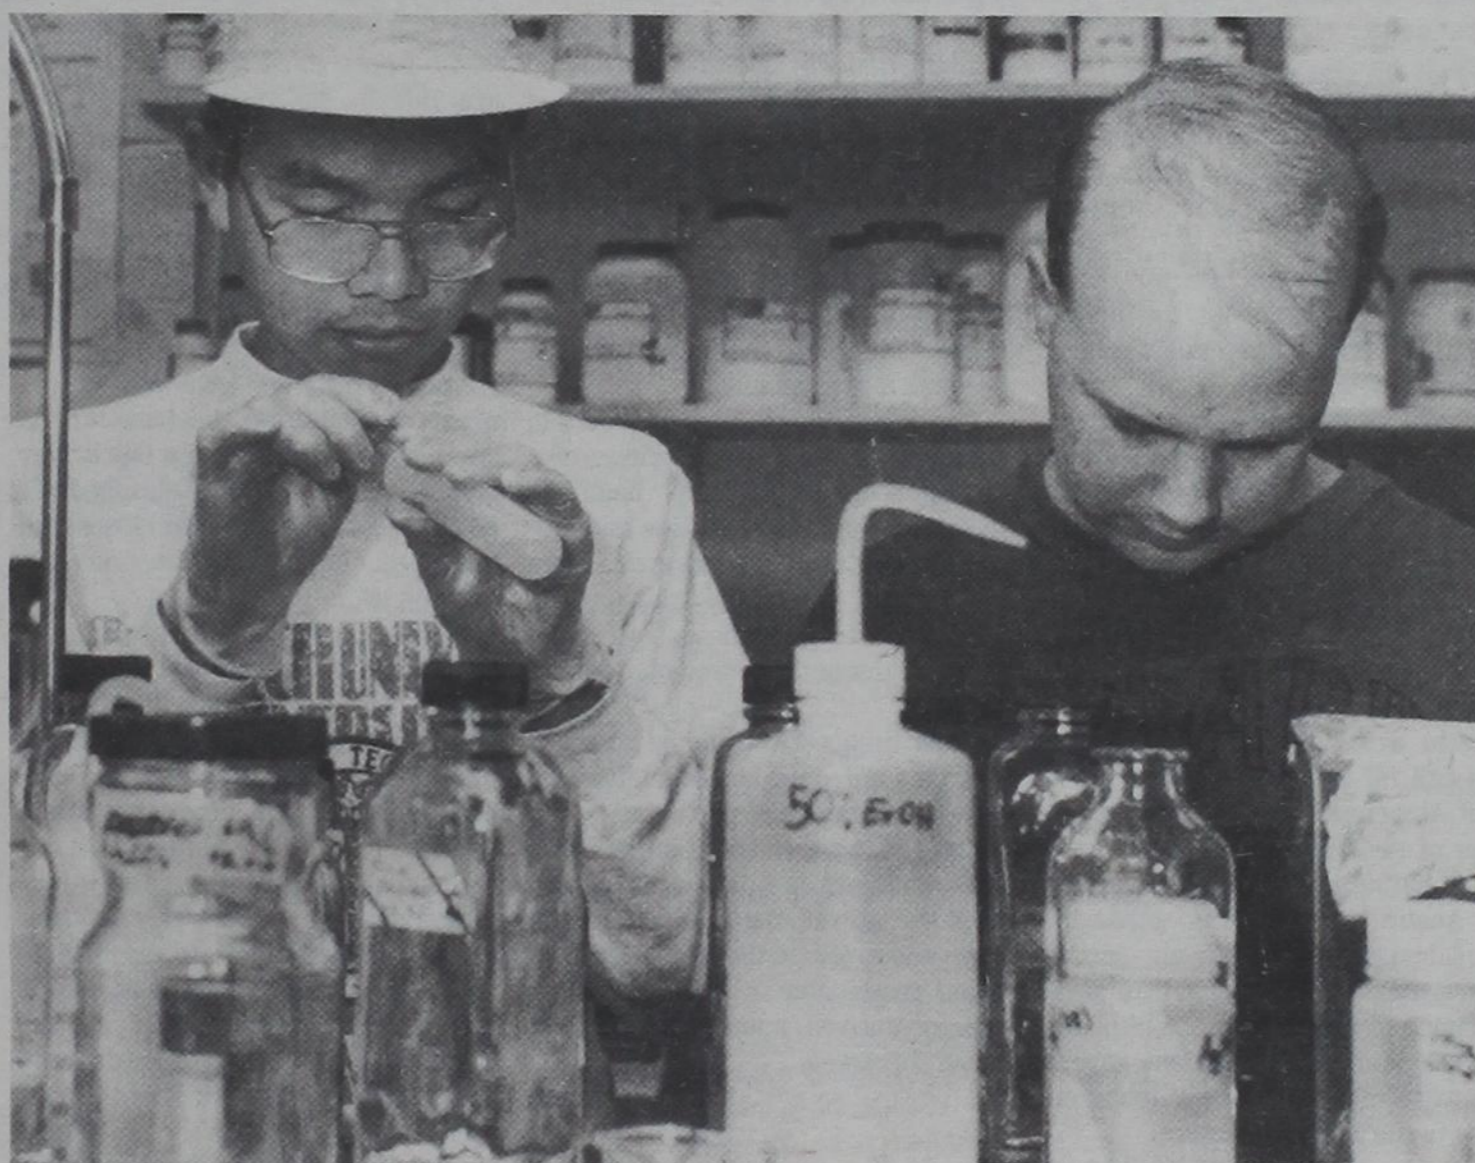

"If we can figure that out, we can then determine how we can block these micro-organisms from feeding off of the plants," San Francisco said.

Wang said the process of entering applications for various research projects around the country is nothing new to him.

He conducted research in the field of computer science at Brandeis University in Massachusetts last summer.

"Each summer I try to go to different places around the country and conduct research projects, meet new people and have fun at the same time," Wang said.

Wang said he was not surprised about being chosen to conduct research at Tech, but the opportunity makes it easier for him to pursue his

Placement center offers Tech students career options

By AMY COLLINS
The University Daily

Many students are faced with the dilemma of finding employment after graduation. The Texas Tech Career Planning and Placement Center offers students an opportunity to examine their career options.

Services offered by the center include: career advising, interviews, Career Day, seminars, summer employment assistance and referrals.

"Our role at Career Planning and Placement is to assist students in career development in any way we can," said David Kraus, staff director at the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The center, which is a division of Student Affairs, has five counselors who deal with the seven colleges on the Tech campus.

"We do not have enough faculty for the students," said Ginger Nicholas, assistant director for the Colleges of Arts and Sciences and Education. "But our staff is dedicated to helping Tech students."

"We want students to know that they are not just numbers," Kraus said. "Tech students should know that they have much to contribute to Tech as well as to the work force."

Orientation, which is currently taking place, informs incoming students of the services provided by the Career Planning and Placement Center.

"Students should seek our services as freshman and sophomores as opposed to seniors," Kraus said.

Nicholas said she sees the Career Planning and Placement Center as a partnership with students.

"We will help the different students at Tech in different ways," she said.

Delores Ludwig, assistant director for the Colleges of Home Economics and Business Administration, said the name career planning and placement should be changed to career planning and networking.

"Students assume the word placement means we will automatically find them jobs after graduation," Ludwig said. "This is not necessarily the case."

Recent complaints from students concerning the center is that their services focus on engineering and business majors.

"Our office deals a lot with supply and demand," Kraus said. "Many students do not realize this."

Many oil and engineering companies have recently approached Tech for graduates who will make the best workers, Kraus said.

Nicholas said she believes the trend could shift dramatically next spring to other majors, such as liberal arts or agricultural sciences.

Kraus said he believes a unique quality of the center is that it looks into the student's character, and tries to convince future employers that Tech students are the best choices for them.

One of the more advantageous services offered to students through the center is Sigi Plus, Ludwig said.

Sigi Plus is a computer-based guidance and information system which is divided into nine sections with each one relating to a stage in making a career decision.

"Sigi (Plus) has proven very successful among students," Ludwig said. "It gives students an opportunity to discover what work-oriented values and features they are looking for in a career."

Campus coverage getting better

To the editor:

I just wanted to let you know that I have really enjoyed the articles in the UD this summer. I have always wanted to see more articles in the UD on news that directly affected the campus. I have seen that for the first time this summer. It seems that if there is enough campus news during the summer to fill the paper, then the regular semester should be even more campus-oriented. I look forward to seeing the content of the paper in the fall. If it is similar to the summer, then I'm sure that a lot of students will enjoy the change when they return from their summer activities.

I especially appreciate the recent series of articles about the budget situation. I submitted a guest column during the last week of the spring semester encouraging Tech students to write their legislators concerning the proposed cuts before the Legislature. It is vitally important that we communicate our concerns to our legislators, especially with the budget special session scheduled to begin in a couple of weeks on July 8. If students need further information on how to write their legislators, they can call 742-3631 or come by the Student Association office on the second floor of the University Center. I will be attending a meeting this weekend in Austin with several other SA Presidents of other Texas universities concerning the state budget situation. We hope to concentrate the efforts of all Texas university student governments to more effectively lobby our case to the state legislature.

Russell Laird,
Student Association president

Lubbock should learn to recycle

To the editor:

I would like to address a growing problem that our city and state are both trying to ignore — recycling. This issue comes up now and then in the news, but nothing seems to be done beyond talking. I guess most people feel better about it by making half-hearted suggestions and pretending that we are truly concerned. Has anyone ever stopped and thought why we aren't doing anything to help preserve one of the biggest and best states in the nation? Lubbock, as well as Texas, falls way behind many states in their efforts to recycle. Why is this?

Since we are from such a large state, we have plenty of room to put all of our trash, right? Wrong! Let's hope that other states don't start thinking that way and make us known as "Texas, the Landfill State."

I am aware of the program the City of Lubbock is currently testing. The idea is that bags are distributed for families to presort their own recyclable garbage. It will then be picked up periodically. How many people will take the initiative just because it is available?

The only problem this will solve is saving consumers the expenditure of having to purchase hefty bags for their personal use. Our state and city government need to address this issue by making laws and regulations. They need to give these laws some teeth by fining those who don't abide by them.

Other things that could be done are charging a deposit on recyclable cartons, containers and packages.

Some states are even going so far as to ban all packages that are one inch over the size of the product. I urge everyone to join in the efforts that are being made and to let our elected representatives know how we feel about this issue.

Student services not up to par

To the editor:

Ah, for the good ol' days of Texas Tech. This summer I have seen a host of petty injuries to the quality and number of student services.

The only dining hall, Wiggins, is halfway across Texas Tech from where I live in Gaston. Housing and dining never mentioned that this change would take place when I signed on in the fall. Further, the dining hall is packed with cheerleaders, campers and sundry other rug-rats. Thanks Housing and Dining and Texas Tech.

Along with the other injuries, this year the campus has returned to the bike-chasing moped police. You know, guys, this campus is spread out like crazy and to get to class on time you simply have to have a bike.

But the drivers here simply don't notice you when they are driving. Thus, you ride on the sidewalk — you also ride on the sidewalk because that's where most of the bike racks are. But the university never provided bike riders with bike paths or notices to motorists to look out for people on bikes.

Another injury is that bus lines simply don't service the area like they should. It really seems to me that the hall I live in, Gaston, was simply looked over when plans were made for summer because of its small size. According to a bus driver on the yellow route, they simply don't go by Gaston Hall, and the closest the bus does come by is the Coliseum parking lot.

Another injury is the library's abbreviated hours. The last time I attended summer classes, the library had relatively good, but still abbreviated, hours. Now with the present schedule, it is simply not worth the time to go to the library.

But of all, I think the greatest injury I have seen in services this summer can be seen in the UD. It has little information about the campus, and it has Kirk Baird-Parks. Of all the things that I would like to see dropped this summer, it is Kirk Baird-Parks. Mr. Parks is probably a decent human being, but he cannot write, he isn't funny and his articles are a boring waste of space in the UD. I would rather see ads for tanning booths than see a Kirk Baird-Parks article. If anything can be done to improve student services, it would be to replace Mr. Parks (if budget constraints allow it) with someone that can write — and maybe with someone who can write funny, witty or even factual articles that would be a joy to read.

I know, I am a dreamer.

Retiring executive assistant pleased with unplanned career

By JULIE COLLINS
The University Daily

Clyde Morganti, the soon-to-be retired executive assistant to President Robert Lawless at Texas Tech, said he plans on playing more golf and doing some fishing once in retirement, although fishing may be the more difficult recreational sport to participate in.

"Considering the Lubbock area, I won't be doing much fishing around here," Morganti said.

Morganti will retire today after 21 years of service to Tech. Although he never planned a career in academia, Morganti said Tech has treated him very well over the years.

Jim Brunjes will replace Morganti as appointed vice-president of administration.

"I came to work for the then president of Tech, Grover E. Murray in 1971. I had spent the previous years in the military, so my position at Tech has been a second complete career,"

Morganti

Morganti said.

For the past 21 years, Tech has grown both geographically and in student enrollment, and its role in research has increased over the years, he said.

Tech has also seen a change in the kinds of students that attend the university.

"Over the past 21 years, I have seen the students at Tech become more involved in the social and governmental aspects of the university, which is a positive sign," Morganti said.

Morganti said Lawless is currently involved in recruiting presidential endowed scholars to Tech. Presidential scholars must have a SAT score of 1,350 or an ACT score of 31, and they must complete a minimum of 12 hours each semester.

"Dr. Lawless has taken a very strong interest in increasing the quality of students that attend Tech," Morganti said.

Although he has enjoyed the time he has spent at Tech, Morganti never thought he would become an employee at a university.

Morganti flew bomber planes during World War II in the European campaign and later traveled the world while in the military.

His last assignment was at Reese

I have always had a great relationship with each president and with the faculty and staff at the university.

—Clyde Morganti

He said one of the biggest problems that Tech faces in the coming school year is the financial question.

The 1990-91 fiscal budget for Tech ends in August, and Morganti said it will be difficult for Tech to make plans for the 1991-92 school year when there is no proposed budget set.

"Every institution around the state is concerned about the financial situation that affects their university," Morganti said.

"It is hard to plan on operating with a school budget when we don't have one to work with."

A limited budget also makes it difficult to compete with other universities around the state for qualified and talented faculty, he said.

"Despite the fact that the funds for attracting faculty to Tech is often not available, the quality of faculty and staff members has improved a great deal over the years," Morganti said.

Efforts underway to save dairy barn

By AMY COLLINS
The University Daily

Texas Tech students have mounted an effort to save the dairy barn from demolition.

"The processing of renovation includes three phases," said Russell Laird, Student Association president.

Laird said he believes the first phase — fundraising — is the most crucial.

"The Saddle Tramps have had great ideas about for fundraising," Laird said. "They have issued shirts which sell for $15, and it has been great."

Other fundraising efforts included sketched prints of the dairy barn, which are selling for $20.

"Until the early 1970s the barn was used as a milking and storage facility," he said.

After the milking facilities were abandoned at the barn, it was used as a storage facility for the theater arts department.

"The barn has deteriorated to the point where storing is ultimately dangerous," Laird said.

"The idea of renovating the barn has been in the works for at least 15 years. The administration finally gave us the OK to get things started."

The second phase of the renovation includes rebuilding the roof and sealing the doors and windows.

"The cost of rebuilding the roof has been estimated at $40,000," he said. "At the moment we have $22,000."

Laird said he is hoping that students from the agricultural sciences department and the architecture department will provide student workers for the renovation.

"If students got involved in the renovation, it would save us a lot of money," Laird said. "It would also give the students an opportunity to save a little of Tech's heritage."

Laird said he believes the renovation should begin by the middle of the fall semester.

"We have the ball rolling now. We just can't stop until it is finished," he said.

Future plans for the renovated barn could include: office space for student organizations, a student center and a museum.

"I would like to make sure that the barn will be something the students can be proud of and make good use of," Laird said.

Arch Lamb, founder of the Saddle Tramps, is organizing a committee of alumni to help with fundraising efforts.

"Many of our alumni have worked in the dairy barn when it was used for the purpose of milking cows," he said.

Center aids in job search

The center also offers a computer-based career planning program called Discover.

The Discover program provides students with the opportunity to learn about themselves, occupations, schools and different programs of study.

A cooperative education and internship program has recently been added to the services offered by the center.

Kraus said he believes employers are increasingly interested in students who have completed internships before they graduate.

"An internship tells employers many things about a student," he said. "Employers see that these students are hard working, eager and bright."

Ludwig said she believes that students should be realistic when looking for a job.

"Realism and retention are the two main qualities an employer is looking for," she said. "Good retention among employees means less work for the employer."

"One of the toughest tasks a student will ever have is looking for a job," Nicholas said. "Hopefully the Career Planning and Placement Center will help students in a successful job hunt."

Lubbock's Teranga restaurant enjoys 'hell fire' success

By KIRK BAIRD-PARKS
The University Daily

Upon entering the Teranga restaurant, 4035 34th, the culture behind the restaurant and its owners is immediately apparent.

Pictures of Senegal adorn the walls, which have a red, yellow and green stripe running lengthwise across the eatery.

There are paintings, posters — and the air is filled with the sound of African music. But the atmosphere is not the important aspect of this establishment: it's the authentic West African cuisine.

Marinated chicken simmered in an onion sauce (Yassa), baked fish with marinated onions (Caldu) — both served on a bed of rice — as well as African shish kebab (Dibi) are all specialties. But forget the salt and black pepper.

Co-owner Cheikh (pronounced "shake") Faye said there is no need. In fact, he frequently watches people as they sit down to eat their meals.

"They don't use anything like ketchup, salt or black pepper," he said. "They just start eating."

But if garnishes are needed, they come with the meal. Tringy Spinach (a sauce), and for heat lovers, there is African Hell Fire.

"It is very appetizing," Cheikh said referring to the hell fire. "It creates an appetite; you don't eat it by itself, like jalapenos. You eat a little bit of it with something."

For some, the idea of a West African restaurant in Lubbock is a bit of a cultural displacement. But Cheikh doesn't view it this way.

"We owe this to the Lubbock community with us being part of Texas Tech and raising a family here. We thought that maybe it was time something like this should happen here," he said. "A lot of people say it is about time. They want to know if they have other African restaurants in other cities."

Cheikh said the only other African restaurant in the United States he knows of is in Washington, D.C. This is not to suggest that some people don't want to see this concept expanded.

"An Austin band that was visiting here wanted us to move. We are thinking about it, but if we move it will probably be to Austin or San Antonio," said co-owner, and Cheikh's brother, Waly.

"They thought that maybe Lubbock shouldn't have something like this," Cheikh said. "I thought 'why not?' There are Italian and Mexican restaurants.

"People think that only Africans should come here, but that's not true. Everybody should try it; that's the purpose of it," he said.

The concept began when Cheikh enrolled at Texas Tech as a restaurant hotel management major seven years ago. He had left his native Senegal and went to New York. After some urging from a brother who was already enrolled at Tech, Cheikh came to Lubbock.

'Soapdish' both strong, confusing

By KIRK BAIRD-PARKS
The University Daily

With the satirical new film, Soapdish, reality can sometimes be just as confusing as the make-believe world.

In this case, the sub-plots to the actors' lives in this film are sometimes as ludicrous as the characters they play on the soap opera "The Sun Also Sets."

Though this is a conscious effort by the screenwriters, the lunacy does get a bit out of hand, a la TV sitcom style, and ultimately reduces a sarcastically witty film to a fairly-funny slapstick movie.

The notion of turning a soap opera into an open playground for commentary has an appealing notion to it. Tootsie used a soap opera as a backdrop piece to both comment on its characters as well as provide subtle symbolism to the real-life drama that unfolded.

Soapdish wants to be crafty, and at times succeeds, but the finale, where the actors are indistinguishable from the characters they play, is a bit heavy-handed and tends to weight down the story.

But when Soapdish hits its intended target, it does so with stinging accuracy and inspired bits. A lot of the credit for this must go to the star-studded cast (When was the last time you heard "star-studded cast"?).

Kevin Kline, Sally Field, Robert Downey Jr., Whoopie Goldberg and even Cathy Moriarty all provide terrific comic turns — even if they have a tendency to play up their roles with the same zeal of a soap character both on-and-off the soap opera TV set.

Soapdish is the story of a long-running soap that is desperately try-

The script does provide for funny moments in the meeting room. Garry Marshall does a splendid job in a small role as the director of the network's daytime programming.

Perhaps this is what Soapdish needs — more of a glance into the inner workings of a soap opera. How writers manage to come up with lines like "guilty of love in the first degree," as well as plots about "brain fever" affecting a mute homeless girl.

Instead, the story simply starts out with a bite and loses itself to a zany but feel-good ending similar to themes it wants to satirize. $$$½.

ing to stay afloat the ratings heap. There is the in-fighting between cast members. Celeste Talbert (Field) is America's sweetheart, who has been on the show for 20 years. Her spiteful and malicious co-star (Moriarty) wants to leave her evil character behind and replace it with Celeste's character's wholesomeness. She inlists the aid of the show's producer (Downey Jr.), who will do anything for her in order to sleep with her.

After several failed attempts, often thwarted by Celeste's writer (Goldberg), the producer goes to Florida. At a dinner playhouse, he asks for Jeffrey Anderson (Kline) to return to the show after a 20 year hiatus — he was written off the show by decapitation after Celeste wanted him off.

Anderson is busy performing "Death of a Salesman" to a group of hard-of-hearing retirees. He sees this as a chance to get back into show business, as well as get back at Celeste.

But revelations begin to fly as Celeste's niece (Elisabeth Shue) gets a small part on the show and Anderson asks her out on a date.

Speculated trades brewing after NBA draft

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Some of those trades speculated about in the days before the NBA draft might occur in the next few days.

Several teams drafted players in overcrowded positions and hinted the dealing may be yet to come.

The most obvious example came when New Jersey took Kenny Anderson, the player Sacramento coveted, leaving the Kings with forward Billy Owens as the No. 3 pick.

The Kings already have Wayman Tisdale, Lionel Simmons, Antoine Carr and Anthony Bonner at that position, and player personnel director Jerry Reynolds promises a deal — not involving Owens — for a point guard by Monday.

"It just created other problems for us, but we think we have those problems resolved," Reynolds said. One report said the deal would send Tisdale to Boston in exchange for Brian Shaw.

Another pick that prompts speculation is Miami's selection of Michigan State's Steve Smith at No. 5.

It marks the third consecutive year that the Heat has taken a swingman from the Big Ten in the first round.

Miami drafted Glen Rice of Michigan in 1989 and Willie Burton of Minnesota last year.

"I thought Miami needed a power forward," Smith said. "I guess I'm needed, too."

The Atlanta Hawks practically guaranteed that deals will be made.

Asked if ninth pick Stacey Augmon would be dealt, general manager Pete Babcock said, "We didn't draft him to move him, but there's been a lot of interest."

Babcock said he was concerned that the team was "treading water" and some changes had to be made.

"We want to get to the next level," he said.

In response to the loud booing by local fans after Anthony Avent of Seton Hall was drafted 15th, Babcock said, "All I can say is stay tuned."

Avent and Augmon each said they were happy to be chosen by Atlanta. As for the rumors of a deal, Avent said, "It really doesn't matter. I'm just happy to be in the league."

At the 12th pick, the New York Knicks added another player to their crowded point guard stable when they took UNLV's Greg Anthony, who joins Maurice Cheeks and Mark Jackson at the position.

Augmon and Anthony joined with No. 1 pick Larry Johnson to become the fourth set of first-rounders from the same school in the same year.

Consumers to blame for abundance of sports products

Charles Pollet
Managing Editor

"And for the paltry sum of $24.95 you will receive 'Touche: The Greatest Fencers of 1974.' This video will enrapture you with fantastic sparring, unbelievable moments on the mat and the funniest bloopers in the world of fencing in 1974. Don't miss out on this fabulous offer..."

I see advertisements such as this repeatedly day to day on television and think to myself, "Who would possibly buy such a farce?"

Yet these ads are continuing to flourish, so ritual home sports shoppers must be dialing their phones frantically to charge another sports promotion product to their MasterCard.

I am a die-hard sports fan, and I do have Michael Jordan's "Come Fly With Me" video and several football highlights videos. But, many of these videos are televised on Sunday afternoon at 4 p.m. in July, when the baseball season has not reached its climax and fly-fishing has the highest rating for that time slot. So why pay $19.95, $24.95 or even $29.95 for a video that no one watched when it was originally broadcast? Maybe it serves as a glass holder so drink rings don't appear on the coffee table, or the person wanted a blank video and was too lazy to take $3 to Wal-Mart and buy one.

So they buy a $20 video on the correct way to put a worm on a hook when they don't own a rod and reel.

The vicious cycle of sports highlights videos for sale began with Sports Illustrated, and they have cleaned up. They offer a greatly reduced subscription rate (which really is a lucrative offer), and throw in a highlight video to lure in the suckers, i.e., those watching fly-fishing.

"Subscribe now and you receive the official NFL can opener at no extra charge. Use the can opener that is used in every NFL team's locker room in your own home. The official NFL can opener is a $12.95 value, but it is yours absolutely free with a paid subscription to Sports Illustrated."

Who would possibly care to own the official NFL can opener? The subscription to a quality sports magazine such as Sports Illustrated at a reduced rate is more than enough incentive for me to buy it. Keep the lousy can opener.

However, I don't blame the market for the influx of useless promotional gadgets; I blame the couch-potato consumers.

If these useless people did not buy every product advertised on television, the promotions would die off.

To solve the annoying problem, all ads for highlight videos and sports gadgets should be banned from public television. Then, a person must have a credit check before receiving cable (where the ads would be broadcast). If a person has a credit history of buying these products, they would be excluded from receiving cable.

The conscientious public who did not waste money and tie up telephone lines for these products would not have to take out the trash during each of these mindless commercials.

Walter Granberry/The University Daily
