Bush stance unclear Mystery of tax position hindering Congress

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Confusion over President Bush's position on higher taxes slowed congressional efforts Wednesday to start work in earnest on a new budget agreement. Bush showed no inclination to clarify matters, saying, "Let Congress clear it up."

Congressional Democrats complained that an apparent Bush rejection of higher taxes on the wealthiest Americans — a reversal of the position he took at his news conference Tuesday — would make it tougher to forge a budget compromise.

But there was no shortage of options, as both Republicans and Democrats began floating new versions of tax and spending plans on Capitol Hill.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole and other lawmakers who met with the president Tuesday night said he had not ruled out the tax boost at that private meeting, as reported by Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters that Bush "listened to" the GOP lawmakers rather than stating a position.

Bush, on a campaign trip in the South, was asked repeatedly about the matter, but turned away the questions with wisecracks.

He was asked as he jogged during a break in St. Petersburg, Fla., if he would care to clear up the confusion. "Confusion?" he responded.

Was he giving up on a capital gains tax rate cut, the item the Democrats supposedly were to trade for his support of higher income taxes on rich people?

"Read my lips," he said, pointing, as he jogged by.

Could he clear up his position? "Let Congress clear it up."

The Senate Finance Committee indefinitely postponed a meeting at which it was to discuss a budget package written by its chairman, Texas Democrat Lloyd Bentsen, generally in line with the tax trade Bush endorsed at his news conference.

"I had the deal all worked out until the president changed his position on taxes," said Bentsen.

Across the Capitol, the House Ways and Means Committee considered a plan written by its chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill. The package was similar to the measure Bentsen's panel had readied, although it would add restrictions on tax deductions available to people earning more than $100,000 annually. It also would add private planes worth more than $100,000 to the list of luxury items subject to a new 10 percent tax, and place a 2-cent-per-gallon tax on petroleum products — excluding home-heating oil.

Facing an Oct. 19 deadline, congressional committees must work out tax and spending details adding up to a $500 billion reduction in the federal deficit over the next five years.

Medicare spending is expected to be cut, though not as much as in the budget package rejected by the House last week, and taxes are expected to be increased on such consumer items as gasoline, tobacco and alcohol.

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said, "I had hoped for agreement on tax proposals along the lines Sen. Bentsen had indicated an intention to offer and ... the president had indicated an intention to accept. The president's reversal of that position last evening ... requires us to reconsider and attempt to determine how best to proceed."

The confusion was also exposing rifts among Republican lawmakers.

A group of conservative House Republicans put together a deficit-slashing plan of their own, raising the income tax rate on the wealthiest Americans from 28 to 31 percent. It would drop the rate on people who are almost as well-to-do from 33 percent to 31 percent, and not increase the gasoline tax.

"We're delighted to have White House input," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., the leader of the group. "We're not looking to the White House for leadership."

At day's end Tuesday, GOP senators had visited Bush to tell him they opposed raising taxes on the wealthy even if Democrats would agree to capital gains rate cuts.

"He just acquiesced in it," Packwood told reporters afterward.

Jet crash kills two in Arabia

By The Associated Press

An Air Force jet crashed Wednesday in Saudi Arabia, killing both crew members, while relatives of U.S. servicemen in the Persian Gulf urged President Bush to pledge he will not order offensive military action.

The jet fighter was the fourth U.S. military aircraft involved in an accident in the gulf region. In all, 24 servicemen have died since the United States began deploying forces in the gulf region. Eight are missing and presumed dead.

Meanwhile, 400 Americans and other foreign captives in Kuwait and Iraq signed up for the first U.S.-chartered evacuation flight from Iraq and Kuwait since Sept. 22. The flight was to leave from Baghdad later Wednesday. Most were being evacuated from Kuwait and were taken by bus to the Iraqi port city of Basra. From there, they left on an Iraqi Airways Boeing 747 for the Iraqi capital.

The more than two-month-old gulf crisis continued to bring bad news for the U.S. economy. Oil prices rose briefly to a record $41.15 a barrel Wednesday on the New York Exchange, before falling back to $40.88 in early trading.

On Tuesday, oil closed at $40.40, the previous record high.

Traders said prices were pushed higher in part by the slayings Monday of 19 Palestinians in a clash with police in Jerusalem, and by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein's threat to retaliate against Israel.

Saddam announced Tuesday that Iraq had added another missile to its arsenal and said it could be launched "against the targets of evil when the day of reckoning comes."

He made it clear he was referring to Israel and the U.S.-led forces sent to Saudi Arabia after Iraqi invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2. About 170,000 U.S. forces are deployed in Saudi Arabia and on warships in the gulf region.

In a news conference in Washington, two members of Congress, religious leaders and family members of U.S. service personnel expressed their concern about the military deployment in Saudi Arabia.

"The Persian Gulf crisis is not just a constitutional, a military or an economic crisis. It is a family crisis," seven families wrote in an open letter to Bush. "All across the country families are facing the possible death of loved ones in a military offensive they do not support."

They urged Bush to pledge no offensive action and to make the U.S. forces part of a "truly multinational and purely defensive peacekeeping force" under U.N. leadership.

Although the United States has so far taken no military action in the gulf, at least 24 servicemen have died in training or other accidents.

Group challenges cosmetics industry

By COURTNEY CHRISTIAN
The University Daily

The Humane Society of the United States challenged the cosmetics industry to find alternatives to testing of personal care products on animals.

"It's obvious that people don't want animals to suffer for vanity products," said Patricia Forkan, HSUS senior vice president.

A growing number of consumers appear to agree with Forkan. In a national poll commissioned by the HSUS, two in five Americans (41 percent) said they would shop in a store solely because it offered cosmetics or personal grooming products not tested on animals.

"It is just good business to offer consumers what they want," Forkan said.

slow developing alternatives to animal testing. In fact, the Cosmetics, Toiletries and Fragrance Association has been building up a war chest to fight (HSUS) efforts to stop animal testing," Forkan said.

In response to the industry's lack of non-animal tested products, HSUS launched The Beautiful Choice campaign.

Manufacturers who do not test personal grooming products on animals may use HSUS logos. The logo, which is easily identifiable, indicates that a product is non-animal tested.

Once retailers realize people want non-animal tested products, "we hope they'll do the smart thing and provide people with products that have earned The Beautiful Choice logo," Forkan said.

Most people shop at convenient locations. People that would change store locations for stores that offered non-animal tested products show a significant concern on the part of the consumers, she said.

SA deadline on fund changes today at 5 p.m.

By CHRIS BOBBITT
The University Daily

Student organization representatives who want changes in funds allocated by the Student Senate can make requests today in the Student Association Office for fund reallocations.

SA officials will take all requests from organization representatives until 5 p.m.

"Organizations are entitled once a fiscal year to request a change in their organization's funding priorities," said Student Senate President Nick Federspiel. "The process of reallocation does not mean an increase in any organization's budget."

All requests are subject to approval by the Senate committee on Budget and Finance. After requests are considered, the senate votes on the change.

Organizational representatives desiring reallocation must submit a written request that outlines the proposed change and the reason for the change.

"We realize the organizations may not know their specific expenses and this is why we allow one chance to request a change."

"If a funded organization realizes it is not attending a particular conference, this is the time to change the allocation," Federspiel said. "The deadline is important because this is the only time they (organizational representatives) can change the funds for the rest of the school year."

Several representatives have requested unused portions of their funds to be allocated to a different organization, he said. Most representatives request funds be allocated to other organizations within the same college.

To donate funds to another organization, a letter to the senate is necessary.

"There is no deadline for organizations giving part of their funds to another organization," he said. "The deadline is for reallocation within the same organization."

Precinct 6 JP candidate speaks to Young Democrats

By MELISSA SHARP
The University Daily

The Democratic candidate for justice of the peace, precinct 6, said he left the Republican Party in January because new boundaries limited his precinct to a Democratic district.

Incumbent McKinley Shepard, justice of the peace for eight years, said Wednesday at a Young Democrats meeting that he would have been ill-advised to run as a Republican again.

"I took a look at what I had to accomplish and what I had to do," Shepard said. "The district includes nearly all minority boxes. People tend to vote in that precinct with the Democratic Party."

The compassion of the Democratic Party also influenced his move, he said. He agrees with Democrats in Congress who fought against Medicare cuts.

Shepard

"I see things from a different perspective now," he said. "I see a lot of compassion in the Democratic Party from the local and county level to the national level."

Shepard won a run-off election by four votes to become the Democratic candidate. He said each vote made a difference because if five of his supporters had not voted, he would have lost.

"That one vote does make a difference," he said. "If we sit home and say the Republicans are going to get it anyway or say they are going to do what they want anyway, we might lose."

Shepard, a minister, said he is pro-family and knows how to deal with people.

"We need to let people know we care, and we as Democrats are capable of doing things we feel are good and are right," he said. "I try to do my job fairly and equitably regardless of race, creed or color."

Shepard is enrolled in a certified legal assistant program at Texas Tech. Although the classes are not required, he said he likes to keep up-to-date with changes in the legal profession.

"I took it upon myself because I wanted to learn as much as I can," he said. "I will never get to the point where I think I can't learn anything. The job of justice of the peace changes everyday, so you have to be adept."

This is an important year for Texas, he said, because voters have the chance to elect a woman for governor.

"The Democratic Party has a lot of candidates we feel good about, and we want to win from the top of the ticket to the bottom of the ticket," he said.

Tech regent sees job on board as chance to give something back

By MARK LACK
The University Daily

Texas Tech Regent Rex Fuller feels honored to be a regent and sees his job as one in which he can "give something back to a school and an education system that gave a lot to me."

A 1967 Tech graduate with a bachelor's degree in business administration, Fuller returned to Tech in 1981, not as a student, but as a member of the Board of Regents. He was appointed by Governor Bill Clements.

Fuller said he has welcomed the responsibility of being a regent the past nine years at Tech. "I like being involved, and it's an enjoyable job," he said.

Although the job of contributing to policy-making at one of the university's highest levels can be enjoyable, the regent said his job can be trying and difficult at times.

"Tough choices need to be made sometimes, but we try to focus mainly on policy-making," the regent said. "Of course when you get to personnel matters and some of those things, they're never easy. You want to be sure you do them correctly."

Fuller said he has seen a myriad of breakthroughs and accomplishments as a member of the Board at the university. "We had president Cavazos retire, and Robert Lawless come in," he said. "A lot of good programs have been added, and the medical school has grown considerably."

The regent said the direction of the university is positive.

"We've increased the academic requirements. There were those who said we would suffer a decrease, but the numbers have grown, and I think the increase speaks for the fact that students today want a higher academic standing, and students will go where that academic standing exists," he said.

"This is the direction that we have to go if we want to be a quality research and educational institution."

He said the regents stand behind President Lawless and his goal of Tech becoming a recognized research university.

"We've got to expand on the idea of being a research university to provide the kind of academic excellence that we want to provide," he said.

With an unprecedented number of students attending Tech, Fuller said he sees an increasing growth pattern. Fuller's responsibilities as a regent include securing funding for the university.

"We try to get additional funding, other than state funds, from both public and private sources," he said.

In addition to being a member of the Board of Regents, Fuller's interests include his family business in oil and gas exploration.

He is currently the owner and operator of three companies in the Lubbock area — Rex Fuller, Fuller Operating Company and Fuller Companies.

Fuller, who has lived in Lubbock most of his life, traveled to Stanford, Conn., in 1973 to become part of the Stanford Executive program. In 1971, Fuller met his wife, Gloria, in Lubbock. He has three children — Robert, 14; Amy, 10 and Ryan, 9.

Persian Gulf crisis affecting millions directly, indirectly

Flora Lewis
Columnist

The Persian Gulf crisis has already directly affected the lives of well over a million people — refugees, hostages, military personnel, residents of occupied Kuwait.

Many hundreds of millions more are or will be indirectly affected even if it doesn't come to open war.

"It is surreal," an American visitor commented watching the perfectly real planes and tanks on TV. This sudden catastrophe blew up out of a distant desert to catch the whole world unaware, and the end is not in sight.

How could it have happened? It was prepared step by step with a series of shortsighted policy decisions, misunderstandings and self-delusions.

The most startling revelation is the conversation that the U.S. ambassador to Baghdad, April Glaspie, had with President Saddam Hussein on July 25, after Iraqi troops were massing on the Kuwaiti border and just a week before the invasion.

Iraqi diplomats provided a transcript to The Washington Post in an obvious effort to undermine President Bush, but it does help explain why Saddam now says Bush "went crazy."

That is a way of saying he did the opposite of what Saddam thought he had reason to expect.

In an interview with The New York Times the day before the record was published, Ms. Glaspie corroborated the key point. She is an experienced, widely respected professional diplomat, and chose her words with care.

"I wish I had been the only one in the world who was right," she said. "Obviously, I didn't think — and nobody else did — that the Iraqis were going to take all of Kuwait."

The important word is "all."

Saddam had been giving notice for months that he wanted money, lots of it, to pay off his war debts and feed his coffers.

He blamed Kuwait for reducing his income by driving down the price of oil with production well in excess of its OPEC quota and demanded compensation.

Further, he insisted, two small Kuwaiti islands astride his access to the Gulf and the Kuwaiti part of the Rumaila oilfield straddling their border should be transferred to Iraq.

At the OPEC meeting two weeks before the invasion, Iran, Saudi Arabia and others supported him in the oil price rise. But he wasn't satisfied and pressed the remaining demands.

There was no sign that anybody else objected, including the U.S.

That is the meaning of Ms. Glaspie's saying nobody expected him to take "all," only the parts he already claimed.

She confirmed the many previous signals of a strong U.S. administration tilt to Iraq, according to the report, ignoring open threats from Saddam and assuring him, "I have a direct instruction from the president to seek better relations with Iraq."

Later the White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, confirmed that was the policy. "At that time we were trying to nurture relations with Iraq. It's very clear."

Clear as a wink and a nod, the traditional language of Middle East diplomacy.

Everybody else thought Saddam was bargaining tough, moving his troops to bully Kuwait into a compromise they would endorse.

Another example was the order by President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt to withdraw U.N. peacekeeping forces in 1967, which he didn't think would be obeyed, and announcement that he had mined the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, which he hadn't. Israel was provoked to war.

Lesson one is that the higher the stakes, the riskier the attempt to fiddle with words.

Lesson two, more important for the U.S., is not to confuse goals and maneuvers.

It can be argued that the Iranian regime would have collapsed by now but for the national response provoked ed by Iraq's war. In any case, it is hard to argue why nobody queried Iraq's vast arms purchases for two years after the ceasefire.

World politics changes. Cruel, ambitious dictators do not. This will be true after Saddam Hussein. The U.S. can forget that again at its peril.

Letters

The last word

To The Editor:

This is the last letter I plan to write in response to the criticism of my previous writings, specifically the second letter submitted by Eric Dankesreiter, and the other writers.

Dankesreiter seems to take pride in his high school's stringent dress code, and sees no problems with removing an American's fundamental right to choose. And, once again, he misunderstands several of my points. But before I contest his argument, let me commend him once again for presenting the only semi-intelligent response asserting the other side of the dress code coin.

First of all, I am truly pleased that Dankesreiter's home town school produced such success stories. But linking academic success with rules of dress is a spurious connection at best. My high school continues to be a nationally recognized school of excellence. It features a relaxed atmosphere, a curriculum broader than most community colleges, a comprehensive sex ed program, and a policy guaranteeing complete and total freedom of dress for its students and faculty. It also features the lowest dropout rate in the nation, (1985, 1986 statistics), and an SAT average much higher than the national mean. In fact, Edward R. Murrow H.S. has been designated by Republican administrations as the model of excellence for the American high school of the 1990s.

Mr. Dankesreiter, your high school is in a small town; if you believe that Lubbock and its surrounding towns truly mirror the nation, you are sadly mistaken. If you leave this land of neo-puritanism and look at the real world outside of Lubbock's Bible-belt borders, you will see a nation that needs to concentrate on improving and updating what we teach our children, and not on trivial matters like a dress code.

Secondly, if you truly believe that David Duke engaged in what I referred to as "harmless rebellion," I believe you are uniting two of my points incorrectly. I do not deny his right to run for the senate, but I believe the fact that he has a following is dangerous. Nor would I deny a skinhead the right to shave his head to assert his philosophy, provided he does not engage in the violent racial attacks associated with his group. Obviously, the dress code enforced at Dankesreiter's school did not improve his reading comprehension.

"Can we stop now," he asks, "and challenge ourselves to build a new society?" Yes sir. Answer the following question: Can the goal of a better society be best achieved through (a) imposing dress codes on schoolchildren, or (b) changing the curriculum to reflect the needs of our nation in 1990, and beyond. If you answered (b), as I would, then realize the LISD should alter its immediate goal.

As to those who, unlike Mr. Dankesreiter, prefer to condemn my views of freedom of choice because of my agnosticism, I ask you, why? Are you afraid that your personal place in heaven is threatened by my refusal to take the Bible literally or my denial of the existence of your image of a supreme being? Stop hiding behind your biblical quotes. Make sure your white hoods are not too tight; after all, your brains cannot withstand further oxygen deprivation. Fire up your book-burning stoves, and enjoy the freedom this country gives you. But don't accuse me of being less than human because I don't believe.

Why do I refuse? Because I've seen far too much suffering in this world. I see no evidence of an all-knowing, peace-loving supreme being. If you want to make a believer out of me, walk across my swimming pool. Until you do, leave me to my wicked ways, and, as long as you keep your own to yourselves, I won't bother you.

I apologize to the vast majority of Christians who adhere to the maxim "love thy neighbor." If your right to pursue your faith were ever threatened, rest assured I would defend your right to the death. The remarks above are directed only to those who use Christianity to justify invading our most basic civil rights. Thanks to The UD for the opportunity to express my views.

Legalize drugs

To The Editor:

They tell us everyday on television and in the newspapers about the alleged evils of drugs. I have learned to ignore most of this rubbish, but a recent article in The UD (10/9) dealing with the potential medical dangers of marijuana, has prodded me into speaking out. The article, if you recall, stated that marijuana lowers a man's sperm count and is potentially dangerous to pregnant women. Surely these cannot be counted as possible reasons for making the drug illegal. Could they? Are not half the items in the world bad for pregnant women?

What I fail to understand is the logic of this article and the entire drug war it represents. It seems to suggest that marijuana is illegal because of harmful side effects if abused. But let us think for a moment, is this not true of so many other things we eat, drink or smoke? Cigarettes are responsible for the death of thousands more people each year than marijuana, yet they are sold over the counter. Alcohol is a widely abused and dangerous item, certainly worse than marijuana. In fact some studies suggest it may be worse than the dangers of cocaine and heroin. Yet we serve fine wines everyday in our restaurants; television commercials even teach us to think of it as glamorous. Even everyday items like caffeine, sugar and salt are unhealthy if one is not careful with their use. So on what basis are some dangerous items legalized and others criminalized? Or perhaps more importantly, what right does the government have to tell us what to do with our bodies?

Another contention of the anti-drug crusade is that drugs are somehow evil and lead to all of the crime in our cities. Sadly, many people actually believe this myth. All of the television shows with "good cops" blowing away "drug-crazed punks" takes an unconscious toll on an individuals personal beliefs.

All we really need here, however, is a little common sense. The gangs in Los Angeles are gunning down each other for money, not for, or because of, the side effects of drugs. We can always expect a black market for illicit substances — it exists because the product's demand makes it profitable. If the government passed a law making sugar illegal then its prices would also rise and pretty soon there would be gun battles over bales of sugarcane. Fortunately, this system can work the other way around. Legalizing some of the soft drugs and selling them at low prices would raise needed tax dollars and cripple the foundation of big drug cartels. Implementing such a system would not be easy, but it could not be any worse than what we have today.

In this day and age drugs have become a regular part of society. Ignoring that by living in the past can be dangerous. How shameful that a society built on the premise of freedom can regulate what substances people choose to put into their bodies. We should not punish our countrymen for using intoxicating substances, but for coming to work under their influence.

So don't sit in your home behind electronic eyes and deadbolted doors blaming all our nation's problems on plants growing from the ground. Instead, use a little common sense and encourage narrow-minded politicians like Clayton Williams to do the same.

Bad reasoning

To The Editor:

I do not find the LISD dress code to be one of the more poignant issues to our time. However, many of the letters concerning that subject, that have appeared on this page, were so bereft of reason that I felt compelled to write. The arguments put forth by Larry Pyeatt and Patrick Russell in their acrimonious attacks have disturbing implications that extend far beyond the dress code. Their arguments make commentary on the philosophy du jour that has left the human spirit in such destitution.

The main premise of both letters seems to be the right of the individual to the free and unfettered expression of his or her individuality. This being true, they are incredulous that the school board has the audacity to attempt to impose limits. If you carry out their logic ad infinitum you bring the concept of individual license to the point of pathology.

Let me illustrate. What if I decide that I will come to school wearing a dead animal around my neck? Would Messrs. Pyeatt and Russell approve? By their own reasoning they can do no other than to admit that my behavior is acceptable since I am expressing my individuality. However, I doubt that, in practice, they would object if someone prohibited me from wearing the dead animal. If Messrs. Pyeatt and Russell find this illustration ineffective we could extend it to myriad situations and at some point they would find my conduct so egregious that they would say stop. At that point they would also have to say that there are limits on human liberty.

Their argument inherently denies the concept of a higher good and denigrates the ideals of community, societal standards and a natural morality. Reason is dead and all that is left is our individual proclivities. The most that we can say about another's behavior is that it is different from our own. The human spirit is left adrift in an expansive void without direction.

If Messrs. Pyeatt and Russell want to argue that the LISD dress code is inequitable and capricious because it allows one to wear a cross but not a star of David, fine, I will stand with them and argue the point. But their view of freedom is so skewed that it does not make their case.

Supreme Soviet adopts limits on weapon testing

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet legislature on Tuesday followed the lead of the U.S. Senate by unanimously adopting limits on nuclear weapons testing embodied in two treaties from the 1970s.

The Supreme Soviet went beyond the Senate, appealing to parliaments around the world to ban nuclear testing and repeating the Kremlin proposal for "global nuclear disarmament."

The significance of the treaties has waned since the 1970s. Today, the superpowers are preparing to seal one pact to cut their nuclear arsenals and another to scale back conventional forces in Europe.

Additionally, environmental protests might force the Soviets to unilaterally suspend nuclear testing.

Earlier this year, public pressure forced the Soviet government to suspend testing at its main site, Semipalatinsk, in Kazakhstan.

Tornado researchers aim to protect lives

By TARA MULDRON
The University Daily

Damage-causing elements of tornadoes, hurricanes and windstorms are something researchers in the Disaster Research Center at Texas Tech don't run away from.

The individuals involved in the center develop structures to protect citizens from natural wind disasters and study the effects of tornadoes and hurricanes.

"We have developed an above-ground in-residency shelter that people can place in their homes even after their homes have been built," said James McDonald, professor and interim chairman of civil engineering. "We probably mail out more than 10 sets of plans a month for the shelters."

The in-residency shelters resemble closets and consist of three layers of three-quarter-inch plywood. A steel sliding door further protects the occupants.

"The shelter looks and can be used like a normal closet in a home," McDonald said. "The steel sliding door is used only during emergencies, while a wooden door normally is used for appearances.

"We discovered that the concept of the old outdoor underground shelter really was not very practical. Often there is not much warning before a tornado hits. It is much easier for residents to escape to a closet within the home than to an outdoor underground shelter."

Administrators at NASA's Spaceflight Center are seeking Tech's Disaster Research Center for assistance. A tornado previously threatened the 70,000 employees at the facility, and NASA said they needed protection.

The center has also worked to develop shelters in schools.

"We developed structural techniques covering all details from attaching the shingles to the roof to anchoring the roof to the top of the walls," he said.

"We develop methods to show people what types of materials they should use in building to protect their homes," McDonald said.

Incentives for home owners to build better houses are low, McDonald said. Insurance companies generally pay for the damages, so the homes can be rebuilt rather quickly.

Insurance companies approached the center to discover means of assessing better-made houses and buildings due to damages created by hurricanes.

"Insurance companies say they want to lower the insurance premiums for property owners with better-built homes," McDonald said. But problems of properly assessing existing buildings arise.

The Center for Disaster Research, a division of the civil engineering department, began in 1970 after a tornado destroyed much of downtown Lubbock. The Board of Regents officially recognized the center in 1972.

The center was the first to measure windspeeds of tornadoes. Meteorologists previously estimated tornado windspeeds to be in excess of 600 miles per hour, but the center's studies revealed the maximum windspeeds to be less than 300 miles per hour.

Die Warzau relies on slam dancing, politics in music

By CRISSE McMENNAMY
The University Daily

Industrial music is sweeping colleges throughout the nation, and Die Warzau just might be holding the broom.

Not satisfied with the current state of music, this group decided to create something a little different. The result is what the band describes as the sound of the bleak metropolis and the cry of urban alienation.

The Chicago-based duo will present their unique musical vision at 9 p.m. Friday at the 19th Street Warehouse, 19th Street and Avenue G. But take warning, this band encourages slam dancing and crowd interaction.

"We really try to break down that barrier between the band and the audience," said Van Christie, one of the Die Warzau duo. "If that means we jump off the stage and slam dance, that's cool. It's all just a release of energy."

In addition to entertaining the audience with various antics, which in the past have included the delights of a small chainsaw, the band tries to focus on the lyrics of their tunes.

"We really have a lot to say," Christie said. "We don't particularly see this as entertainment, but as a way to talk to people and express our ideas."

Unfortunately, due to the political content of many of their songs, these ideas sometimes spark a selective listenership. In their tune, "Welcome to America," the duo chastises the efficiency of the U.S. government with lyrics like, "We ride the bus to freedom — Waiting for the mushroom sign — This is a failing nation — This is 1989."

"Yes, I'll admit it — we try to put politics in our music," said Jim Marcus, the other half of the duo. "But we don't carry the same message as Consolidated or U2. We're just happy if the people will get out and register to vote!"

Taking their name from a World War II orchestra comprised of

we are nothing like this Paula Abdul stuff," Marcus said. "We have a limited audience, but I can honestly say that our followers are people I would like automatically. We play smaller shows, but we really connect with the audience."

After being signed by Fiction Records, the label which also carries the Cure, Die Warzau found the medium they were looking for to crank out their tunes. In March of 1990, "Strike To the Body" reached number three on the college music charts.

"Our music and our ideas come from life and things that happen," Christie said. "We don't try to imitate a certain sound."

Oakland sweeps Boston; Clemens can't keep A's from third-straight title

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Oakland Athletics clinched their third consecutive American League Pennant with a 3-1 victory to complete a 4-0 sweep behind the pitching of Dave Stewart Wednesday in Oakland.

But the American League East champion Boston Red Sox left Oakland Alameda County Coliseum still shaking their heads.

Boston starting pitcher Roger Clemens flamed out of the game in a rage, cursing and screaming in frustration at the home plate umpire after getting thrown out in the second inning of the series' final game.

Clemens stood on the mound, preparing to pitch and swearing at home plate umpire Terry Cooney when Cooney bolted from behind the plate and said he'd had enough abuse.

Cooney signaled the disbelieving Clemens out of the game. Boston manager Joe Morgan charged Cooney from the dugout and Clemens had to be restrained. Reserve infielder Marty Barrett also rushed out from the dugout and was ejected. Boston players tossed two coolers and a garbage bin from the dugout onto the field.

John Peale, a film messenger for The Associated Press who was located directly behind the backstop, recounted this exchange that led to Clemens' ejection:

Clemens: "You son of a bitch. You don't know where the strike zone is."

Cooney: "What?"

Clemens: "I'm not talking to you. You son of a bitch."

Then followed a stream of other profanities before Cooney tossed Clemens.

Clemens, pitching on three days rest despite a bout with tendinitis that has plagued him the past month, threw hard but had trouble with his control before he was ejected.

He gave up a leadoff single to Rickey Henderson in the first inning before getting Dave Henderson to hit into a double play and Jose Canseco to ground out.

In the second inning, Carney Lansford singled to center with one out and Terry Steinbach followed with a single to left. Lansford, running on the pitch, reached third and Steinbach took second when Mike Greenwell's throw skipped past third.

Clemens backed up the ball and walked it back to the mound, fuming at himself or his teammates for his early predicament.

Clemens bore down now, an angry look on his face, shoeback under his eyes and an unshaven face.

Clemens then threw three straight balls to Willie Randolph before getting a strike, but walked him on the next pitch.

As Mike Gallego came to the plate, Clemens stood on the mound, cursing Cooney for what Clemens felt were inconsistent calls.

Oakland sweeps Boston; Clemens can't keep A's from third-straight title

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Oakland Athletics clinched their third consecutive American League Pennant with a 3-1 victory to complete a 4-0 sweep behind the pitching of Dave Stewart Wednesday in Oakland.

But the American League East champion Boston Red Sox left Oakland Alameda County Coliseum still shaking their heads.

Boston starting pitcher Roger Clemens flamed out of the game in a rage, cursing and screaming in frustration at the home plate umpire after getting thrown out in the second inning of the series' final game.

Clemens stood on the mound, preparing to pitch and swearing at home plate umpire Terry Cooney when Cooney bolted from behind the plate and said he'd had enough abuse.

Cooney signaled the disbelieving Clemens out of the game. Boston manager Joe Morgan charged Cooney from the dugout and Clemens had to be restrained. Reserve infielder Marty Barrett also rushed out from the dugout and was ejected. Boston players tossed two coolers and a garbage bin from the dugout onto the field.

John Peale, a film messenger for The Associated Press who was located directly behind the backstop,

recounted this exchange that led to Clemens' ejection:

Clemens: "You son of a bitch. You don't know where the strike zone is."

Cooney: "What?"

Clemens: "I'm not talking to you. You son of a bitch."

Then followed a stream of other profanities before Cooney tossed Clemens.

Clemens, pitching on three days rest despite a bout with tendinitis that has plagued him the past month, threw hard but had trouble with his control before he was ejected.

He gave up a leadoff single to Rickey Henderson in the first inning before getting Dave Henderson to hit into a double play and Jose Canseco to ground out.

In the second inning, Carney Lansford singled to center with one out and Terry Steinbach followed with a single to left. Lansford, running on the pitch, reached third and Steinbach took second when Mike Greenwell's throw skipped past third.

Clemens backed up the ball and walked it back to the mound, fuming at himself or his teammates for his early predicament.

Clemens bore down now, an angry look on his face, shoeblack under his eyes and an unshaven face.

Clemens then threw three straight balls to Willie Randolph before getting a strike, but walked him on the next pitch.

As Mike Gallego came to the plate, Clemens stood on the mound, cursing Cooney for what Clemens felt were inconsistent calls.

Tech moves to 18-1 after disposing A&M

By BELLE MILLER
The University Daily

The No. 12 Texas Tech volleyball team improved its Southwest Conference record to 2-1 Wednesday night as they beat Texas A&M at College Station in a four-game match 15-10, 11-15, 17-15, 15-10.

The Red Raiders, now 18-1 on the year, detoured the Aggies to a 7-12 record overall and a 1-2 conference mark.

Freshman middle blocker Erica Ruegg paced Tech in the decisive fourth game, as she earned three of her seven kills on the evening. Ruegg also had three blocks in the final game.

Middle blocker Lisa Clark and outside hitter Sabrina Zenon blocked Aggie outside hitter Elizabeth

Edmiston for the final point to give the Raiders their second consecutive conference win.

Tech took an early 7-1 lead in the fourth game before A&M came back to tie the match 7-7. The Raiders, led in part by Ruegg, rallied to win the match.

"Erica Ruegg was the difference in the match," coach Mike Jones said. "We told Erica it was her job to block those players in the middle and she did that late in the match."

After trading points and side-outs in the third game, the Aggies etched the lead 15-14. Following a kill by Zenon and a block by outside hitter Kristen Sparks, Ruegg blocked A&M's middle blocker Amy Cummings' kill attempt to win the game 17-15.

In the second game of the match, Tech held a sound 10-3 lead before the Aggies tallied eight unanswered points and went ahead 11-10. A&M won the game 15-11.

"A&M played great," Jones said. "They were aggressive and they could have won the match just as easily as they lost it. We really had to work hard for this win."

The Aggies were just the sixth opponent to have pushed the Raiders past the three-game minimum so far this season.

Offensively, Tech had trouble throughout the match as they hit a low .137 hitting percentage. A&M had a team hitting percentage just below that at .115.

Setter Sheila Solomon had a season high of 50 assists. Solomon also contributed 15 digs and six total blocks.

Ruegg led the Raider squad in hitting percentages with a mark at .500. Middle blocker Chris Martin followed behind Ruegg with a .353 hitting percentage.

Zenon ended the evening with 17 kills, seven digs and three blocks.

The Aggies were led by Cummings and Edmiston with 17 and 15 kills, respectively.

Mavs open camp with new attitude

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — Sam Perkins went West. Roy Tarpley got married and a new attitude. Rodney McCray, Alex English and Fat Lever moved into the neighborhood.

Richie Aduabato got some job security.

The NBA's version of "Twin Peaks" is getting cranked up for a new season as the Dallas Mavericks are shooting hoops again. The team that controversy hasn't forgot is back on the court.

Free agent Perkins decided he had enough of General Manager Norm Sonju's contract juggling act and signed on with the Los Angeles Lakers.

"There was always something going on in Dallas and now maybe I can settle down," Perkins said.

Last year, the Mavs fired coach John MacLeod before the season was a month old. It was the quickest firing in NBA history.

Two seasons ago it was an unhappy Mark Aguirre who was sent packing to Detroit for Adrian Dantley, who never lived up to his reputation. Dantley was cut loose without the Mavs receiving a thing in return.

Dallas went looking for talent after losing Perkins, who's capable of playing at either forward spot as well as at center.

From Sacramento, they obtained McCray, one of the slickest small forwards in the league. McCray had hernia surgery in the off-season but was expected to be ready for the regular season.

From Denver, they acquired Lever, who likes to run-and-gun and can play both point and shooting guard.

The Mavs also broke out their checkbook and signed scoring-machine English.

Last year, the Mavericks finished third in the Midwest Division with a 47-35 record. They beat the Rockets in the first round of the playoffs before falling to Phoenix in the second round.

To improve, the Mav's new players will have to mix with old reliables such as center James Donaldson, who still has to be rested because of leg problems, and guards Derek Harper and Rolando Blackman, one of the toughest tandems in the NBA.

Tarpley has two strikes by his name in the NBA's three-strikes-and-you're-out drug policy. He missed most of last season for admitted substance abuse and came back late in the season after visiting a rehabilitation center in California.

"I'll be a much more responsible person now that I'm married," Tarpley has promised. "I owe this team a lot."

The married life and homecooking also had Tarpley ballooning up to 269 pounds. Tarpley's goal for the Nov. 2 opener at Minnesota is 245.

Aduabato has started the Mavericks off with a rough training camp. He wants them to have a conditioning edge over the other teams when the regular season begins.

"I believe that one of the keys to (Western Conference champion) Portland's turnaround last year was their physical toughness which showed in their boardwork," Aduabato said. "They led the league in that department. They were playing with reckless abandon and that's the way we'd like to become so we stepped up our conditioning program."
