— White Mercenary Says —

'Kill - - Or Be Eaten' Is Slogan In Congo

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The Daily Toreador was one of the first publications on the South Plains to contact Lt. Forsbrey after he arrived in Lubbock late Friday afternoon.)

By EUGENE SMITH
Staff Writer

"Kill or be eaten" are words to live by in the guerilla war in the Congo, says Lt. Charles Henry Forsbrey, one of the white mercenaries fighting in the Congo.

"When you capture a man, you ask if he's a rebel. If he says yes, you look him straight in the eye and shoot him. If we don't kill them, they kill us and eat us. There are no prisoners taken in the Congo."

Lt. Forsbrey is in the U.S. visiting friends, including Joy Cox, a Tech coed from Plainview. They met through her brother Jimmy, who is stationed with the U.S. Army forces in the Congo. Lt. Forsbrey and Joy began writing each other and swapping photographs after he saw some family photos.

Visits America

"When I got some time off," said the lieutenant, "I decided to visit America. I had never seen the United States before, and I thought I'd come see Joy."

Forsbrey was born 32 years ago in Rhodesia. His mother was German and his father was an American engineer. They met in Germany during World War I.

After finishing high school, he served in the British merchant marine and the Army of the Federation of Rhodesia, a British colony.

He went to the Congo six months ago as an instructor and was given a commission and command of a "Commando," which is a group of 39 white mercenaries.

"The mercenaries are the best fighters in the Congo," he said. They are also called the "Green Berets."

The mercenaries come from all walks of life and many different countries. Most of them are from the Republic of South Africa, but others are from Canada, Denmark, Italy, Greece, Germany and Rhodesia. He said he knew of only two from the United States.

They are all trained in the Congo, and many have no previous military experience.

Hate Communism

"They come for money, adventure and experience," he said. "All of the mercenaries hate communism, also. One of the first questions we ask new men is how they feel about communism."

"Someone has to fight them, and it might as well be us."

All commissions are conferred on the basis of experience and ability. All the mercenaries are divided into the "Commando" groups. Lt. Forsbrey is commander of the 51st Commando. They fight for six months and then are given three weeks off.

There were only about 250 mercenaries in the Congo when Lt. Forsbrey arrived, divided up into six Commandos, the 51st through the 56th. However, plans are now in effect to bring the white forces up to a thousand or so men to better combat the thousands of rebels they have to face.

The mercenaries are paid by Prime Minister Maurice Tshombe's government. Half their pay is given them in the Congo and half is sent to a bank of their choice.

Lt. Forsbrey's antagonists in the war are the communist-backed Simbas, led by a former member of the Congolese government, Antonio Gebenga.

"Gebenga is what he calls me," the lieutenant said. "He's sadistic. He kills for the sake of killing, kills for his own aims. He calls himself a 'freedom fighter,' but he's not. If you want to kill someone, shoot him, but there's no need to kill the way they do."

He said the rebels are just now becoming well trained enough to resemble an army. In general, they are superstitious and stupid.

Drugged Natives

"Our first encounter with the rebels was with some of those that drink a local drug. They were so drugged up, they just stood around, armed only with a machete-type knife. They waved palm leaves and chanted 'Lumumba mya,' mya meaning water. They were praying to dead Lumumba (Patrice Lumumba, late prime minister, who sided with Communists) to turn our bullets to water. Of course, we proved differently."

The rebels are armed almost entirely with weapons from Red China and Russia.

"They even have their own mercenaries now, from Algeria and Egypt, which are Communist in thought," he said.

The Simbas (simba means lion) are ex-Congolese army men and tribesmen recruited from the area.

360 Delegates Prepare For MUN Opening

The colorful arrival of 360 delegates in native dress will open the third annual Model United Nations session at 1 p.m. Thursday.

The three day session, sponsored by Tech Union, will be highlighted by John MacVane, ABC correspondent to the United Nations. He will speak Friday at 10 a.m. on "Is the U.N. Doing its Job?"

MacVane is a specialist in foreign and U.N. affairs. He served during World War II as political and combat correspondent in Europe and Africa. He has been at the U.N. since its first meeting.

The General Assembly will convene after the opening ceremonies Thursday and begin discussion of charter review and revision and the Jordan River conflict.

Officers Set

Zafer Cetinkaya, from Turkey, is Secretary-General of the U.N. Lonnie Dillard is present of the General Assembly, and Sheryl Andrews is secretary.

The Security Council will be called in session sometime during the Friday session. Jim Crawford, director of public relations at Tech Union, said that specific plans for the sessions are tentative since the U.N. will be as spontaneous as possible.

Various blocs and their leaders include Kathy Lowdal, Africa; Rebecca Wilson, Asia; Linda McSpadden, Latin America; Tommy Watt, Middle East; Bill Lomerson, U.S.S.R.; and Peggy Brownlow, Western bloc.

Dates Planned

The General Assembly, open to all students, will convene as follows: Thursday, 1-5 p.m.; Friday, 10 a.m.-noon and 1:30-5 p.m.; Saturday, 9 a.m.-noon and 1:30-3 p.m.

The Model U.N. will end Saturday with the 7 p.m. awards banquet in the Coronado Room of Tech Union.

SC Studies New Plan For Council

Further discussion on the constitutional revision and possible vote on whether to present it to the student body will highlight the Student Council's meeting tonight, President Ronnie Botkin said Monday.

"If the Council members think we are ready to vote on the revision, we will, and then we will decide on a date to present it to the student body for approval," Botkin said.

He also said that the Council was considering March 18 as the date for the students to vote on the revision.

Also on the agenda for tonight's meeting will be appointment of a committee to study an extended curfew for women proposed last week by Pat Rogers and Nancy Miller, both Tech students.

Their proposal calls for a 12 p.m. curfew for all Tech women living in residence halls for week nights. Tommy Craddock, representative from School of Business Administration, is sponsoring the proposal in the Council.

Tech Symphony Orchestra Will Tour El Paso Area

Texas Tech's Symphony Orchestra will visit the El Paso-Ysleta area on its annual tour, Wednesday through Saturday.

The group will perform in two evening concerts as well as on school programs during the tour. The first evening concert is scheduled 8:15 p.m. Thursday at Burgess High School and the second will be with the Tech Chamber Orchestra at 8:15 p.m. Friday at the El Paso Art Museum.

The orchestra will present programs at Coronado and Andress high schools, El Paso, and Bellaire High School, Ysleta.

Featured Soloists

Featured soloists on the programs will be Virginia Kellogg, violin instructor, playing "Zigeunerweisen" by Sarasote; and Benjamin Smith, assistant professor of cello, playing Popper's "Elfentanz" with the orchestra.

Accompanying the Chamber Orchestra will be Miss Kellogg on the violin; Barbara Sperberg, senior, and Frank Bowen, flute instructor, playing the flutes; Kent Hill, harpsichord instructor, playing the harpsichord and Mary Alice Hongen, harp instructor, on the harp.

Concerts will be under the direction of Paul Ellsworth, associate professor of music and founder of the Tech Symphony Orchestra.

'Beauty, Beast' Voting On Tap

The new Tech Beauty and Beast winners will begin their tenure Saturday at 9 p.m. when the penny-a-vote contest climaxes.

They will be crowned at the Beauty and Beast Ball in the Tech Union Ballroom.

The contest is sponsored each year by Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity. This year all proceeds from the voting and entrance fees will be donated to a fund for improvements in the Union.

Jim Tillinghast, a representative of the fraternity, said Monday that the contest now has 17 contestants sponsored by various campus organizations and dormitories.

Voting will begin Wednesday and continue until Saturday night in the Union foyer.

CONGO FIGHTER—Lt. Charles Forsbrey, right, a mercenary soldier in the pay of the Congolese government, is visiting Lubbock and the Tech campus this week on leave from fighting in the African nation. Here, Lt. Forsbrey is in a native village with an American officer looking for "bows and arrows."

Mercenary...

"They have boys fighting with them," he said. "They are from 10 to 15 years old and are called 'Generes.'"

The rebels are well armed, he said. They use mortars, automatic weapons, machine guns, armored vehicles and mines.

"They used to fight only in hit and run fashion, mostly ambushes," he said, "but now they fight us in the towns."

Little Strategy

They use very little strategy. "You can never predict what they will do next."

"They don't know why they are fighting," he said. "Gebenga wants control of the Congo, which is very rich. In Africa, there is always an underdog who is trying to take over."

"The Congo was definitely not ready for independence. When independence was first given, Lumumba was in control. He cut off trade with the Belgians, who then decided to support Tshombe, who had seceded from Congo with Katanga."

"The U.N. came in on Lumumba's side, which was a mistake. The mercenaries fought the U.N. then, before I came to Congo. When Kasavubu (president of Congo) brought Tshombe out of exile after Lumumba was killed and asked him to form a new government, Gebenga, who had been minister of the interior, broke away and started the rebel movement."

The U.N. is now gone from the area except for medical personnel. Lt. Forsbrey had some sharp words for some of his "allies" in the war.

"The regular Congolese army aren't much as fighters. In my first action, I commanded a Congolese group and they ran at the first firing. The Katangese are not the same story. They are proud. Good fighters. The Congolese scare more easily and they are lazy."

Take Equipment

"The Belgians and South Africans will never get along. The Belgians used to run the Congo, and they still take equipment meant for us." The Belgians are separated from the other mercenaries in the armed forces there.

His side has very little in the way of air power.

"The Congolese Air Force has six planes, four old T-28 trainers and two B-26 fighter-bombers. They are flown by anti-Castro Cuban refugees. We have an air squadron which flies six British Harvard fighters and one Dakota (DC-3)."

"The Americans have been a tremendous help, and they take a chance, too, because they are not supposed to help us officially. They are there because Tshombe asked them for transportation and motor pool help."

Joy's brother, Jimmy, a second lieutenant, is a transportation specialist. The Air Force is represented by units of the Tactical Air Command.

"We thought the U.N. might come back into the Congo when Dr. Carlson (Paul Carlson, an American medical missionary killed by the rebels in December) was killed and again when they shot up one of the American C-130s."

Liberate Whites

"One of our main objectives always is to liberate any whites held by the rebels," he said. "In six months, my outfit alone rescued about 500 whites and thousands of blacks."

"The Belgians should not have sent paratroopers into Stanleyville. If they hadn't, Dr. Carlson might still be alive. We were about two hours away and the rebels didn't know we were coming, but they did know the paratroopers were coming."

The Communists carry on an extensive propaganda campaign, but the people do not support the rebels, he said.

"On one occasion, near Paulis, we were stopped by a local tribal chief and he gave us two rebels he had captured."

He said he had seen many of the atrocities attributed to the rebels.

"In one town, they had kept a lot of nuns nude on the ground and walked over their breasts."

"Also," he said, "for their initiation the 'Generes' are required to capture an enemy and tie him to a tree, cut out his heart, and eat it raw. Then they can become a Genere."

Capture Rebels

He recalled another incident in which they captured two rebels in a small town and a woman attacked one of them.

"She said they had cut off both hands of her two little girls (ages nine and five) and cut out parts of their body. They cooked these and drank the concoction as a medicine."

The lieutenant then said quietly, "I did the same to them, bar the eating."

He sees little hope in the Congo's future. He thinks there will be about three more years of fighting.

"Tshombe is a good chap. He's smart and he knows what he wants. If he can stay alive, he will save the Congo."

"Right now, he is too occupied with the war, but even so, the people are getting better educated than they did under the Belgians."

He doesn't foresee a divided Congo like Viet Nam or Germany. "At present the rebels have been pushed into the northeast corner of the Congo, near the Sudan border—mainly through the efforts of 250 white mercenaries."

Revenge-Minded Raiders Travel To Baylor

Revenge and championship aspirations will be the keynotes in tonight's Tech-Baylor game in Waco as the Raiders go after the only team which has stopped them in conference play.

The Bears, who are 6-4 in league action, dropped the Raiders, 77-74, three weeks ago in Lubbock and snapped the Raiders' 18-game home winning streak.

Since that defeat Tech has won five straight conference outings and now has a two game edge over SMU in league standings with a 9-1 mark. SMU is 7-3.

Baylor Statistics

Baylor is led by the scoring of Darrell Hardy and Ed Horne. Hardy ranks ninth in season scoring with 290 points and a 14.5 average. In conference action he has tossed in 157 points for a 15.7 mean. Horne has scored 177 points in conference action for an average of 17.7 points per game.

As a team the Bears' scoring average is 78.6. Their opponents are averaging 78.4.

Probable starters for Baylor tonight are Hardy (6-7), Horne (6-4), Ed Harris (5-9), Spencer Carlson (6-6) and Winston Moore (6-6).

In last week's action the Bears lost to Arkansas, 78-73, and beat TCU, 97-88. In the TCU game both Horne and Hardy scored 25 points.

Tech, fresh from a 77-67 win over Rice, enters the game with an 87.8 scoring average in conference contests while allowing opponents 75.7.

Dub Malaise continues to lead the Raiders' scoring. He has 442 points for the season and 219 in conference action for a 23.3 and a 21.9 average, respectively. He scored 20 against the Owls Saturday.

Denney Second Scorer

Harold Denney has scored 330 points for the season and has a 17.4 average. Norman Reuther is close behind with 322 points and a 16.9 average. In conference action their positions are just reversed.

Reuther has scored 198 points for a 19.8 mean, while Denney has 170 points and a 17 point average.

Other starters are Billy Tapp and Glen Hallum. Tapp has a 5.0 average in conference play and Hallum has a 12.5 mean.

Tonight's game will be carried by Channel 13 with pre-game warmup at 7:30 p.m. Game time is scheduled for 8 p.m.

Other conference games tonight include TCU and Texas A&M at Fort Worth, Arkansas and Texas at Little Rock and SMU and Rice at Dallas. The Raiders return for a game with Texas Christian in the coliseum Friday.

Coach Suffers Attack

Vernon Hilliard, Tech track coach, was hospitalized last Friday afternoon after suffering a heart attack during a team workout.

Hilliard, whose condition was termed serious, was placed in the intensive care unit of Methodist Hospital. However, he was out of the intensive care ward Saturday and termed as "doing quite well" by athletic director Polk Robison.

The attack was the first Hilliard has ever suffered.

Hilliard, who is the first full time track coach ever employed by Tech, is in his first year as track mentor. He succeeded Don Sparks, who is now serving as full-time athletic trainer of Tech teams.

Doctors said that Hilliard should curtail his activities for an indefinite period of time. A coaching replacement has not yet been determined.

The Raiders' first outdoor meet is the Southwest Recreational Meet March 6 in Fort Worth.
