C. A. Walker Attends District Red Cross Meeting

The Red Cross organization celebrates its 50th anniversary this year. This body, according to Chief Justice Chas. Evans Hughes, fo the Supreme Court of the United States, "represents the united effort of the American people in the ministry of mercy. It is the finest and most effective expression of the A-merican heart.It knows no partisanship. In the perfection of its co-operation, there is no blemish of distinctions by reasons of race or creed or political philosophy. However we may differ in all things else, in the activities of the Red Cross we are a united people. None of our boasted industrial enterprises surpass it in efficiency. No purpose of individual gain on the part of the officers or members detracts from the moral quality of its accomplishments. It moves with precision and the discipline of an army to achieve the noblest of human aims."

The Great Drought of 1930-31—worst disaster in United States history-saw the whole American people rise to the eme-gency and move to the aid of its Accidently Killed victims through the national relief agency, The American National Red Cross Fifteen to twenty million people live in the rural areas of the 23 states affected. More than one tenth of these-estimated at more than 2,750,000-came under the care of the Red Cross.

Relief took a variety of forms: ood, feed for live stock, hot lunches in schools, clothing, seed for gardens and seed for pasturage. Thousands of volunteers work ed under the leadership of a nucleus of trained disaster relief workers. A thousand chapters administered the task in as many counties. Needy cases were sought out and aided. So thoroughly was the job done that not one case of drought starvation occurred. Expressions of satisfaction as to the adequacy of relief came from every state. Self-respect was preserved by permitting heads of families to execute food orders at the home stores. Self-help was encouraged by the distribution of garden seed in hte fall of 1930

Six people, Horace Johnson (who tells the story), his wife, old Mrs. Dane, Herbert Robinson and his sister, Alice and Dr. Sperry, friends and neighbors, are in the habit of holding weekly meetings. At one of them Mrs. Dane, who is hostess, varies the program by unexpectedly arranging a spiritualistic seance with Miss Jeremy, a friend of Dr. Sperry and not a professional medium.

At the first sitting the medium tells the details of a murder as it occurs. Later that night Sperry learns that a neighbor, Arthur Wells, has been shot, mysteriously. With Johnson he goes to the Wells residence adn they find confirmation of the medium's account. Mrs. Wells te'ls them her husband shot himself in a fit of depression.

The French maid admits she was out at the time Wells was shot, telephoning from a nearby drug store. Johnson goes to the drug store where the clerk tells! him the maid phoned to the Ellingham house, telling somebody there not to call that

A mouse, however proved to be the source of sound, and I pulled my self together with a jerk.

It is to be remembered that I had left my hat and overcoat on a chair near the door. There could be no mistake, as the chair was a light one, and the weight of my overcoat threw it back against the wall. Candle in hand, I stepped out into the hall, and was immedlately met by a crash which reverberated through the house. In my alarm my teeth closed on the end of my tongue, with agonizing results, but the sound died away, and I concluded that an upper window had been left open and that the rising wind had slammed a door. It was, I think when I was on a chair on top of a table in Arthur's room, with my candle upheld to the ceiling. It seemed to me that something was moving stealthly in the room overhead I stood there, candle upheld and every faculty I possessed stemed centered in my ears. It was not a footstep.

Fact Story of Adventuré and Romance

By M. K. WYATT

EXAS has been the background of many a fiction story that has been that has been the many a fiction story that has been the reader snell. the reader spellbound, but when Mollie Barnes of Burnett county, Texas, daughter of a Texas ranchman, married James L. Wheatland of Mason county, Texas, and helped her young husband drive 500 head of cattle through the "Indian country" to western Oklahoma, she furnished a fact story of real adventure and romance.

Mr. and Mrs. Wheatland, 82 and 78 years old, respectively, now live on their little farm home in western Oklahoma, near the Washita river, where they settled more than 50 years ago. Their home is surrounded by trees and vines, tenderly nursed and cared for. Mr. Wheatland, active and vigorous for a man of his age, still works his farm on a limited scale.

Trail-Blazer in the Seventies

In the early '70s young Wheatland was a trail-blazer, having accompanied several herds of cattle through Indian Territory, and was much impressed with the grazing possibilities of this new country. He therefore purchased and rounded up 4,000 head of longhorn cattle in Texas and drove them to the Territory, there to fatten on the luxuriant native grasses, in time for the early spring market. Cattle were plentiful in those days and Wheatland bought his 4,000 head ridiculously cheap, compared to present-day prices.

His herd once well established and his anch sod-house completed, ready for occupancy, young Wheatland returned to Texas for the "girl he left behind."

Mollie Barnes had lived all her life on a Texas ranch. She could ride the wildest bronco or rope and tie the wildest steer. She knew all the tricks of the cattle round-ups. Many were the times head was not to be "sneered at."

she and her young lover had ridden the range together.

Elaborate Ranch Wedding

Elaborate preparations had been going forward for the wedding and when Wheatley arrived to claim his fiancee, guests for many miles around had also arrived, as well as the preacher who was to tie the knot.

The days that followed were happy days for the young couple, who spent them in ranch fashion, riding the range, looking over the herds and reviewing familiar

Mr. Wheatland's enthusiasm for his new ranch and herd of 4,000 long-horns roaming the virgin hills and valleys of Indian Territory was not altogether shared by his bride. She loved the Lone Star State, land of her birth, where she had lived all her life and where "the folks" knew her and she knew them. It was a heart-rending experience for Mollie Barnes to tear herself away and follow an unknown path, even with the man of her choice and to whom she had given her whole heart.

Dowry of Cattle

Aside from personal feelings, there was Mollie's dowry which literally would have to be "rounded up," for together with her hand in marriage there went a gift from her father of 500 head of choice cattle. To be sure, cattle were cheap in the seventics, but a gift of 500

Swiftly the days passed into weeks, weeks into months, and finally a year had gone by before the couple were prepared to leave Texas for their new Territory home. Meantime there came a baby girl, and of course arrangements must include the baby in the journey along with the cattle and household furniture, wedding presents and all the accumulations of the first year of mar-with all it could carry. The dowry was "rounded up," baby placed in care of nurse, and Mrs. Wheatland mounted her own little pony and took her place beside her husband. The journey was over the now famous Chisholm Trail.

It was a peaceful journey (not once did the cattle stampeda) but Indians were encountered twice on the way. Just at daybreak, while topping a hill, Mr. Wheatland, an experienced plains- the cowboys and the main herd. Every-man, sighted a band of warriors approaching. He halted and gave orders to his cowboys to "look them straight in the eye but not to shoot unless he gave orders." The Indians came on, their horses running at full speed. Wheatland noted war-paint on the bodies of the Indians and expected the worst. They stopped within a few feet of the cattleman't outfit, their arrows drawn as if to

Indians Friendly

But when Mr. Wheatland gave them a sign of friendship, their arrows were lowered. Making a detour, the Indians finally stopped before the "mess wagon." There they found the baby, cuddled up and cooing, which greatly delighted them. They played with it and began cutting capers and antics to make it laugh. Not knowing the white man's language, the savages could not converse with Mr. and Mrs. Wheatland, but by using their own sign language, with which Wheatland was somewhat familiar, could make themselves fairly well understood. Eventually they mounted their ponies and rode

After this experience Mrs. Wheatland was not afraid of Indians and regarded them as friends, which later proved correct, for the second visit from Indians was at a time when help was sorely needed. Mrs. Wheatland was riding in the thing was peaceful and she was truly enjoying the trip. All around, as far as the eye could see, vegetation was green and the wide sweep of prairie land added charm to a far-away blue skyline. All this beauty thrilled her as she thought of the new life and new home ahead.

Mr. Wheatland, riding at the head of the cattle, his eyes always alert, saw a number of mounted savages galloping in the direction of the mess wagon. He assumed the savages were hostile and intended to attack. Turning quickly, he spurred his horse and was soon beside the wagon, which had been stalled in a bed of sand and could not be pulled out by the team. Mr. Wheatland and the cook pushed the wagon while the horses pulled, but the wagon would not budge.

Give Indians a Treat

They were tugging mightily when the Indians rode up. Instead of drawing arrows and shooting the Indians dismounted and without a word each one of them took hold and literally lifted the wagon out of the sand onto hard ground. Though frightened, Mrs. Wheatland was so overwhelmed with gratitude that she emptied a two-gallon jar of cookies into the hands of the Indians and made them an eloquent speech, not a word of which they understood. Smiling back, and with friendly gestures, the Indians mounted their ponies and rode down the trail until they had disappeared beyond the horizon.

Mr. and Mrs. Wheatland can still visualize the far-away time when Texas and Oklahoma were a raw, unbroken country, practically unpeopled and almost uncivilized. Now their home is surrounded by rich, cultivated fields and kind neighbors. As they sit beneath their own vine and fig tree, in peace and comfort, they feel that many of their youthful dreams have at last come

What Shall We Grow on the Reduced Cotton Acreage?

By J. E. McDONALD Commissioner State Department of Agriculture, Austin, Texas

HAT shall we grow on our surplus (Copyright, 1931, by the Home Color Print Co.) lands?" is a question being asked by farmers who will till their farms next year under Texas' new cotton acreage reduction and soil conservation law.

Before attempting to answer that question for themselves—for it is primarily a question which each individual farmer must answer-farmers should eview the cotton law and what brought

During the second called session of Forty-Second Legislature a law was age is limited to 30 per cent of the land cultivated to planted crops in 1931, and for the year 1933, cotton may be planted on 30 per cent of the acreage planted to annual crops in 1932; however, cotton may be planted on as great an area as that permitted in 1932, in order that the farmer would not be penalized for allowing a part of his land to lie idle dur-

The men who sponsored enactment of this legislation—a good majority of the legislators and an overwhelming majority of farmers of Texas-had many factors in mind, the first of which is the carry-over of American cotton on September 30, 1931, of 6,296,546 bales, against a carry-over of 5.241,062 bales on September 30, 1930, and the fact that only 11,045,000 bales of American cotton were consumed last year, We have, therefore, a carry-over greater than for any preceding year-a condition which never existed before. This is coupled with the fact that foreign countries are encroaching to a certain extent on our cotton markets:

Unregulated Cotton Planting

When we consider these facts, it is ed and is now a part of our State, much easier to determine what to do ites, limiting the acreage which with the 70 per cent of our lands which be planted to cotton. The 1932 acre—may not be planted to cotton, for it is all too apparent that utter bankruptcy would follow if we should continue unregulated cotton planting-not only bankruptcy of the individual farmer over the South, but collapse of cotton land values as well as values of the stable itself.

Those farmers who have learned the priceless lesson of diversification probably need no advice on how to plant their lands in 1932 and 1933. There are a great many farmers in this category. Those others who have been one-cropping for so many years may now follow the example of the farmer who diver-

Since prices of other staple cash crops are below the cost of production, obviously it would seem wise to plant food and feed crops abundantly for home and local consumption, or to feed animals for market or home consumption.

In this connection a striking statement was made recently by an outstanding business man of Texas after a trip to Chicago. While Texas farmers are suffering from over-production and record low prices for their products, he said. Texas packers are being compelled to send to Jowa for hogs and to the Middle West for some of their feed cattle. The moral of that is for farmers of Texas to raise at least enough hogs to supply needs of Texas packers. Carrying the argument somewhat further, Texas farmers should supply all raw materials for those Texas industries which depend upon products and byproducts of agriculture for their raw materials. This would entail, doubtless, research which the individual farmer is not equipped to make, but surely we have in the State enough research bureaus to study this question seriously and advise with the farmer on it.

Clover or Cover Crops

After we have planted food and feed crops, what? Clover or cover crops could be planted on the remainder of the 70 per cent acreage, and turned under to enrich a tired and impoverished soil. Neither can we overlook the laborer, who, all these years, has contributed to our cotton growing industry. During this period in which we are growing a limited amount of cotton, in order to work off the present burdensome surplus, we can well afford to furnish him liberally with land upon which to grow feed and food for his own subsistence.

It would not seem wise to expend a great amount of either money or labor in order to utilize every acre owned, in growing crops of which there are already burdensome surpluses, which are selling for less than production cost. When the plow manufacturer finds he has too many plows in stock, and must cease making plows for a period, he doesn't try to manufacture violins or radios. He simply shuts down his machinery, lets it stand idle until there is a need for more plows. The farmer must learn this lesson from industry, and al- and respected.

low some of his land to lie idle. Taxes must be paid on the land, it is true; but taxes also must be paid on the machinery and on the factory plant, and the farmer or the manufacturer who continues piling up a surplus of his respective product renders himself less able to pay the taxes.

In Biblical times land was allowed to lie fallow one year in seven. That was a Mosiac law, and time has proven it to be the peer of all laws.

This problem is not one which may be solved in the twinkling of an eye, by any one man. As I said before, each man will have his separate problem, depending upon his own peculiar position. It is a problem which will require the thought, patience and confidence, as well as the co-operation of our people—co-operation such as they have proven themselves capable of giving. Knowing the high type and character of our Southern people, we may confidently expect them to proceed as a unit in restoring confidence in cotton values and in general business conditions, and it is my firm opinion that the cotton acreage law placed on the statutes by Governor Sterling's "farmer's session" will prove a great benefactor and will be fully appreciated

D-the Metal Which Dominates World Finance

By ARTHUR WARNER

) the man in the street gold is like the classic of literature—something that he has been brought up to respect but with which he has no personal acquaintance. Indeed, many an American has not seen a gold coin in circulation in years, and he finds it hard to believe that such currency is still in existence or any longer has a function to perform.

Gold was not always such a stranger to the man in the street. Up to this century it circulated in considerable amounts in the United States, and up to the World War it was the preferred currency of Europe. But that conflict swept gold coinage into government coffers or into hiding. Since then, we have lived in what seemed to be a goldless world.

Here in America we learned first to substitute paper for coin and then to substitute credit for both, but it appears that below the pile of paper and promises there is a nest egg of gold which is essential for stability. It is a lack of such nest eggs of gold which is disturbing various countries at the present

It would be hard to explain how gold came to play so dominating a role in the world's drama. Doubtless sentiment has contributed. Gold is at least one object which combines both glitter and indewhich combines both glitter and indestructivity. And gradually, with the Africa—the Rand—are an amazing continuing respect paid to it through spectacle of twentieth-century big business ages, with list come to have a value ness and the triumph of the machine a little more stable than that of any other article. It has come to be our least fluctuating measure of exchange

But the World War and the industrial cataclysms following it have upset the international distribution of gold and so caused governments to totter and banks to close their doors. Added to this, financiers tell us that an actual scarcity of gold is impending. The high point in output was reached in 1913 and unless new fields are discovered it is predicted that the annual addition to the world's gold supply will grow progressively less. Gold is one crop in regard to which we are not suffering from overpro-

South Africa Largest Producer

The largest gold crop now comes chiefly from one small region in South Africa. The United States is the second largest producer, but it is a poor second to that stretch of sixty miles in the Transvaal, the mines of which send forth about half of the world's total annual output of some 20,000,000 ounces, worth roughly $400,000,000, or $20 an ounce. The annual crop obtained only by patient blasting followed by extraction by expensive mechanical-chemical means. The ore is among the lowest grades worked anywhere—running about $6.50 to the ton —and profits are possible only through large operations, modern equipment and cheap labor.

More than 20,000 white men and ten times that number of blacks fight heat and dust to send the Rand's riches forth to the world. It is the modern argonaut quest for gold.

Gold Rush of the Forty-Niners

The discovery of America opened a vast new field from which to obtain gold directly.

The discovery of those first few pieces of glistening yellow metal at John A. Sutter's mill near Sacramento in 1848 precipitated the most remarkable search for gold in history—a search which suddenly expanded this country beyond previous dreams and brought as great a revolution as that which began at Lexington. The California gold rush sent hundreds of fortune seekers across untamed prairies and plains and mountains to pan wealth out of the earth; hundreds of other persons went by sea around the Horn. The travel by sea helped to produce the American clipper ship; the trek overland by means of the historic prairie schooner, or covered wagon —with its indomitable watchword, "California or bust"—began the peopling of a new empire.

The hardihood and audacity of the Forty-niners, their violence and rude justice, their swagger and self-confidence-some of the color of which has been recorded for posterity by Bret Harte—make one of the most pictures-que and full-blooded of our national

A generation ago the California gold rush was repeated in a lesser way by the stampede to the then newly discovered fields of the Klondike, in Northwestern Canada, and about Nome, in Alaska. At first this northern metal, like the early hauls in California, was placer gold, and it drew the individual prospector, but the frozen ground had to be thawed by fires or steam before it would yield its wealth. Dawson burgeoned into a city of 10,000 inhabitants and then dwindled to 2,000. Nome rose and fell in a similar fashion. The easily obtained gold was soon exhausted.

There have been no spectacular discoveries of gold since.

Nearly Half of World's Supply in U. S.

The supply of gold which through the ages the world has been able to take out of the ground and accumulate for coinage is distributed unequally, and in late years this inequality has been increasing in a way to disturb the nations which have the small amounts, and not altogether to please those countries in (Continued on page six)

The Same Old Problem

OTTON has been the chief problem of the Southland since Eli Whitney discovered a process for separating the seed from the lint. How to grow cotton, how to market cotton, how to protect it against insects, and how much cotton to grow, have for nearly a century appealed to the best minds and challenged the best thought of the people of the South. Of late years the greatest problem presented by cotton has been the limitation of production. We can grow more cotton than the world can use, and this hammers the price below the cost of production and bankrupts the growers. Many people labor under the delusion that this phase of the cotton problem is new, having made its advent since the production of the staple reached many million bales annually, but this is erroneous. The same condition obtained before the cotton yield reached two million bales. I have before me the copy of an old paper, a faded journal, that bears the name of "The Weekly Daybook." It was published in New York, and dated October 10, 1869. Though printed in New York, the Day-Book was a red-hot Southern paper and made a gallant fight for the South during the dark days of reconstruction. Being a Southern sympathizer, the paper naturally paid much attention to the South's problems. In the old paper I find a clipping from the Columbus, (Ga.) Citizen on the cotton situation that reads like it might have been written last week, and is as applicable to conditions this year as it was to those of 1869. A report on cotton production had just been issued, estimating the crop at 2,200,000 bales, and the price had dropped from 34 to 28 cents, which, the paper declared, to be below the cost of production and would make slaves of the people of the South. The estimate was not given out by the government, but by a large company of cotton dealers. The paper denounced the estimate as far too high, and showed, to its own satisfaction, that the crop could not be more than 1,900,000 bales. The Georgia paper urged farmers not to market any cotton for thirty days, assuring them that the withholding would send the price back to 34 cents. At the same time it warned the farmers that they were growing too much cotton, and that they must reduce the acreage next year or witness the ruin of the great industry. Journals, statesmen and the people in general have been giving the same advice and sounding the same warning ever since, but the acreage has continued to mount and prices have continued to seek new low levels.

sk sk sk Why Kill the Dove?

For more than a quarter of a century, when the open season for dove-shooting was on, I have written a paragraph something like the one which appears below. Possibly it has been a waste of time, paper and ink, but it has been a labor of love—love for one of God's so desired, but a dollar wouldn't move leave us any cotton. Neither the weevils most innocent and most harmless more than two tablespoonsful of black- nor the worms showed up. But we've pullcreatures - and I shall keep up the work until my writing arm is palsied.

"Bang," went the automatic shotgun. There was a curl of smoke, which was soon wafted away by the breezes and was no more. There was a slick of the gun's machinery and an empty shell fell to the ground. Sixty feet away a pretty dove, mangled and bloody, floundered in the weeds while its soft eyes looked out to see who had done it harm. A minute later the dove was in the hunter's sack, torn and bloody, stiff in the embrace of death, while its lonely mate from a distant tree-top called and called in vain.

The dove is the world's symbol of peace. It will not fight, even when attacked. The dove was the new world's first messenger. It was sent from the ark to ascertain whether the fury of the flood had passed, and returned joyfully bearing a leaf, as a sign that peace had been restored between earth and heaven. The dove is not a destroyer; it asks as food only worthless seeds. It is a sad bird; sad no doubt because the hand of man and the talons of other fowls are raised against it, even though it wishes all well and harms neither the inhabitants of the earth nor the air. Why kill the dove? In its plumage we do not gather the gold of rosy youth, but the dull gray of winter, which must come to all. True, in its song there are not the joyful notes of morning, but there are the comforting love-notes of sorrow that soften our lives and woo us away from sharper griefs. Why kill the dove? For meat it is not worth the shot and shell, and surely there is no sport in bloodying the breast and closing the eyes of this gentle, harmless creature.

Next year is political year, all the way from Coroner to President. Even now a cloud considerably larger than a man's hand may be seen on the political horizon, and the mutterings of distant thunder are heard. In truth, the campaign would be in full flower right now if we had any issues, but there are no issues. and not knowing what issues there will be, creates a suspense that is awful. I know in advance of the declaration of issues which side I am going to be on, but I do wish the Democrats would meet and let me know what I am going to advocate, and what's to be in the platform I am going to praise as the greatest document given to the world since the immortal Declaration of Independence. I am also very anxious for the Republicans to assemble and "resolve," so I may know what I am going to denounce as the "most pernicious doctrine ever advocated by any party."

There's a grain or two of consolation in the financial disturbance created by the low prices of the commodities produced in this country. Old Man High Cost of Living is gradually being forced down from his high perch to a low limb. Twenty years ago the price of corn, wheat, cotton and oats was away up in the pictures, and any person who wanted a job could put in a double shift, if he eyed peas and a pound of bull neck. ed through the worryingest portions of without serious inconvenience, but what haps this is well. The ranks of the un-Send your grocer a dollar tomorrow, and the year. For the remainder of 1931 would a poor fellow of this country do if employed are far too large.

he will promptly forward you enough bacon, peas, beans, sugar, coffee, flour and lard to keep the wife and kiddles quiet several days.

The census reports show that there was a heavy emigration of negroes from the South to the North between 1920 and 1930, but if all of the North follows, the action of one New Jersey town the blacks will return to the South in greater numbers and at a faster gait than they left. On account of a slight race disturbance, the law-makers of the Jersey town issued a decree requiring all negroes to be at home by 9 o'clock. A negro will not stay in any place that will not let him stay up later than 9 o'clock. Before that hour there is not any real fun for Sambo -nobody ever heard of a first-class crap game being in operation before 9 o'clock. A revival meeting at the colored church doesn't become interesting before 10 o'clock, and all that takes place at a "festibule" before midnight is tame. And whoever heard of a successful raid being made on a hen-roost before nine

People never know what they need. Since Time was young people have prayed for bountiful harvests. This year the bountiful harvests came, all along the line. They came to the cotton growers, the corn growers and the growers of wheat, oats, barley, fruits, black-eyed peas, pecans and watermelons. And when they came, they ruined us. Next year, possibly, our petitions should be for a mighty invasion of boll worms, boll weevils, cut worms, greenbugs and grasshoppers. It wasn't plenty we needed at all; it was scarcity.

I am strictly opposed to the practice of stealing, and sincerely hope there will never be another case of theft while Time lasts. But if we must have thieves, and thieves will not quit stealing, I sincerely hope they will steal nothing but automobiles. Punishment for thieves should begin in this world, and not leave all for Old Nick to administer down in Gehenna. And the fellow who steals an automobiles will get a double dose of punishment before he gets close to Satan's lake of fire. Most of his time will be spent trying to keep out of jail, and the upkeep of the car and the taxes thereon will require all the money he can earn and steal.

The people are nearly through with their worrying for this year, thank the Lord. They spent most of late winter and early spring worrying over whether the fruit crop would be killed by the frost. The fruit crop got by in fine shape. As spring came on they worried over whether the cut worms and the green bugs would ruin the gardens, the cotton and the wheat. The gardens, the cotton and the wheat showed up with bumper crops. Most of the summer was spent worrying over whether the boll weevils and the boll worms would we've nothing to worry over except the small items of reducing next year's cotton acreage, what to give our friends for Christmas presents, and where to get the money to pay the taxes the fellows we hollered and voted for failed to reduce.

Nothing speaks so eloquently for the longevity of the American people as the American pension rolls. We had a little brush with the British in 1812, during the administration of James Madison, our fourth President. Andrew Jackson finally put an end to the affair by cleaning up with Sir Edward Packingham's hosts at New Orleans, but there are still memories of the strife. One hundred and nineteen years have passed since Uncle Sam and John Bull laid aside their guns and sabers and signed a treaty of peace at Ghent, but at last report there were widows of men who fought in that war on our pension rolls. The question naturally arises, to what age did men live in that day, and at what tender age did women take unto themselves husbands?

It's awful, sometimes, to be disillusioned. Up to this summer we firmly believed that a certain piece of human anatomy was smooth and symmetrical as a baseball bat, pinky-white as a bride rose, and free from blemish as a baby's eye. But the styles of the past summer shattered another dream of human perfection by revealing a wealth. of varicose veins, pimples, boils, blurredredness, chigger bumps and finger-nail scratches.

All men are not created equal, no matter what the Constitution says. Recently two men faced the tax collector for the purpose of paying their taxes. Both were confident that their tax bills would be smaller than they were last year. since the men they worked and voted for had assured them that such would be the case if they were elected. One of the men was afflicted with St. Vitus dance, and the other stuttered so terribly that it was very difficult for him to speak. When the men were informed that their tax bills were more than they had paid last year, the one who is af flicted with St. Vitus dance found it easy to shake his fist, his head and his entire body with rage, but the poor stutterer got so mad before he could say "damn" that he burst a blood vessel.

All laws should be enforced to the letter, but I read of one case of enforcement not long since that, if generally adopted, will cause the men of this country much trouble. It was the case of a Chicago banker, who was arrested and searched, and a flask of whiskey was found in his pants pocket. The officers took the whiskey, and also confiscated the pants, declaring pants to be a vehicle under the law because they carried whiskey. Looking upon pants as a vehicle may cause some men much trouble and embarrassment. The Chicago banker Rheumatism adds much more to emdoubtless stood the loss of his pants, ployment now than it used to, and personal doubtless stood the loss of his pants, ployment now than it used to, and personal doubtless stood the loss of his pants, ployment now than it used to, and personal doubtless stood the loss of his pants, ployment now than it used to, and personal doubtless stood the loss of his pants, ployment now than it used to, and personal doubtless stood the loss of his pants.

his bifurcated garment were confiscate ed? Under the late ruling, if some one gives you a flask of liquor, place it in your coat pocket. A man can get along without a coat, but pants he must have.

All of us are slow to accept the things we haven't seen, and slower to believe that things we haven't seen done can be done. But in this we do not differ from the good pople who lived before us. It is a matter of record that an Alabamian was turned out of church some sixty-odd years ago for reporting that he had seen ice in Mobile in the summer time. And the extract reproduced below from an old paper tells how the people of 103 ears ago looked upon those who preicted telegraph and steam railway trains.

"In the year 1828 the School Board of Lancashire, Ohio, refused the use of the school house to hold a debate on the practicability of railroads, and adopted this resolution: "You are welcome to use the school room to debate all proper questions in, but such things as railroads and telegraphs are impossiblities and rank infidelity. There is nothing in the Bible about them. If God had designed that His intelligent creatures should travel at the frightful speed of fifteen miles an hour by steam, He would have foretold it through His hely prophets. It is a device of Satan to lead immortal souls astray."

Many men have been unemployed so long that they seem to have lost their taste for work. All around us are pressing invitations to work in the cotton fields, white unto harvest, which have been respectfully declined. Unfortunately, though, those who have lost their taste for work haven't lost their taste for corned beef and cabbage. They will be in the receiving line this winter every time there is a distribution of rations. * * *

Time works many changes, and most of the changes, I regret to say, are expensive. Early in life this writer was overtaken by a refractory attack of rheumatism. Nothing much would have been said about it had the malady not reached the point that its victim was worth virtually nothing as a plow hand, and the crab grass was rapidly taking possession of the cotton patch. The old folks talked of sending me to a doctor, but a neighbor dropped in and told them. such an expense would be a waste of money, and advised that I be required to carry an Irish potato in my left-hand pants pocket. This was done, and after time the rheumatism vanished. A few years ago the rheumatism paid me a return visit, after an absence of forty-odd years. But the good old days were gone. I went to the doctor. The doctor sent me to the tonsil expert, the tonsil export sent me to the x-ray expert, the x-ray expert sent me to the dentist, the dentist sent me back to the doctor.

HE New England States were settled by Puritans, a sturdy English people, who came to America to escape the indignities as companionable as a bulldog and tomand tyranies of the established Church of England. The Carolina and Virginia States were settled by Englishmen, known as the Cavaliers, on account of their sympathies for the ill-fated Charles I.

There was all the difference in the world between a Puritan and a Cavalier. The former was deeply religious, eschewed evil and frowned upon all gaiety and frivolity, regarding laughter as one of knightly, gay, debonair and full of frolic and fun. He could enjoy a good laugh.

A Puritan and a Cavalier, living in the same house, would have been about > cat lapping milk from the same dish. They differed one from the other, not only temperamentally but physically. The Puritan, as a rule, had flat feet and large cow-like eyes, whereas the Cavalier had small feet, higharched insteps and black, snappy eyes.

Should Have Been More Tolerant

The Puritans, of all people, should have been most tolerant patient, since and the cardinal sins. Not even an "Amos an' they were the victims of religious Andy" could have made a sour-faced intolerance and bigotry; but they did Ruritan laugh. The Cavalier was of an not practice these virtues and when they

Answer, sir, and came petty tyrants and enacted stat- answer truthfully, utes, now known as the "Blue Stocking Laws," that sought to regulate not only the private affairs but the religious conscience of every citizen. No Puritan dared kiss his wife in public on any day of the week, much less on Sunday, and to kiss another man's wife was a capital offense, punishable by death. But with the Cavalier it was different; he kissed his own wife anytime, anywhere, when the spirit moved him, and might kiss the other fellow's wife if no one was

All able-bodied Puritans had to attend church Sunday or give a good excuse to the Selectmen the day afterward. Those Monday morning investigations were similar, I suppose, to our city courts, where petty infractions of the law are tried. In imagination I can see the Selectmen, sitting in stern and solemn dignity, ready and anxious to pass judgment on all who were absent from church on a particular Sunday, I hear the clerk call the name of Obediah Jones.

"Obediah Jones," loudly repeats the Head Inquisitor, why were you absent ure.

If Brother Jones were wise, and I syspect he was, more than likely he offered an aching back as an alibi, When a small boy I had frequent recourse to a weak back as an excuse from work; that's why I suspect Obediah resorted to this subterfuge to avoid punishment.

Courting a Trying Ordeal

Courting must have been a trying ordeal to bashful lovers back in Puritanic days when all love-making had to be done in the presence of the entire family, which sometimes included an old maid aunt with a hairy wart on her nose or chin. I know I would have been a flat failure as a Puritan wooer; I never could court a girl with much success if I knew some one was trying to eavesdrop or peep at me through a crack. It was hard enough for me to make love to a girl who had a little brother snooping around to hear what was said, let alone running the gamut of the entire family with maybe the maiden aunt and the hired man thrown in for good meas-

However, some of those old laws governing the family were all right and should not have been repealed. For instance, the ducking stool that was empleved to discourage wives from quarreling with their husbands. What a bulwark of comfort it must have been to the hen-pecked husband, and what a pity we haven't got such a law today to act as a sort of Damoclean s w o'r d - iñ - marital - misunderstand-

But with exception of the ducking stool. I never could have been in sympathy with Puritanic customs and practices, for they were unnecessary, harsh and cruel-the penalty out of keeping with the offense, The Puritans would exhibit a fellow to public gaze with hands and feet securely held in that instrument of torture known as the "stocks" and for no greater offense than cussin' his mule or talking back to his mother-in-law,

We can go too far with discipline. I never have been a stern and uncompromising discipliner. Maybe I am wrong, but if you fail to get anywhere with kindness and reason then your cause is almost hopeless.

(Copyright, 1981, by the Home Color Print Co.) EXAS early in its existence foresaw the need of railroads. The first year of Texas independence, which was 1836, the Congress of the new republic proposed the Texas Railroad, Navigation and Banking Company with a capital of five million dollars and provision for increase to ten million dollars. Nothing came of this company, but there was constant agitation by the few Texans for railroads. Other companies were chartered, but there was no money to put into rallroads, and these also came to naught,

But the year 1853 saw actual railway construction, and at the close of that year there were actually twenty miles of railroad track over which a steam train was operated. This trackage led out from Houston, as did most of the early Texas railroads. The year of 1861 there were the following railroads, with mileage as given

All of these railroads were built before the Civil War, which, of course, stopped all development of the South as well as bathing much of it in blood. They were built in the cotton and sugar lands, nearly all of them in southeastern Texas. Prior to their construction the only means of transportation were the rivers and the mule and ox wagons. The total shows there was about a mile of railroad in the State at the beginning of the war for every 1,000 people.

In the new State, capital was of course scarce, and many ways of raising the (Continued on Next Page, Column 5)

FECAN PLANT FOR LAREDO

A occur shelling plant, which will choley between 500 and 1,000 women, will be erected in Laredo, according to ennouncement recently made by interested parties. The plant will cost about $100,000. Laredo was selected as a location for the plant on account of the availability of labor.

LEON BRIDGE OPENED

The concrete bridge across the Leon river on Highway No. 10, seven miles east of Comanche, has been opened to traffic: This bridge is 1,023 feet in length, and the grading and approaches cover 3,000 feet. With the completion of the bridge an all-weather road is made available across Comanche county.

PECAN TREES TO LINE HIGHWAY The Highway Commission has accepted an offer of Guadalupe county to plant pecan trees on Highway No. 3 through that county as a memorial to the veterans of the Army of the Republic, the Civil War, the Spanish American War, and World War, on condition that the Highway Department preserve and maintain the trees.

KERR COUNTY CLAIMS DELIN-QUENT TAX RECORD

Kerr county claims an outstanding record among Texas counties for its low delinquent tax totals for the 45-year period from 1885 to 1929, inclusive. The yearly average was less than $313, and the total was only $14,050.45. County officials believe that this is the lowest delinquent tax total in the State.

TWO COASTAL CANAL ROUTES STUDIED

Two lines for the proposed Intracoastal Canal from Corpus Christi to the Missouri Pacific bridge at Harlingen have been made by government engineers stationed at Point Isabel. The two routes to be considered for the waterway are an inland route from Laguna Madre to Corpus Christi, and a route in the center of Laguna Madre channel, which would go from Laguna Madre through the center of Red Fish and Baffin Bay.

PRACTICED MEDICINE 53 YEARS IN ONE COMMUNITY

Dr. W. R. Tennison, of Summerfield community, Cherokee county, has practiced his profession, that of medicine, in the same community for more than 53 years, and has not yet laid aside the pill bags. Dr. Tennison returned from medical college in 1878, after receiving his diploma as a disciple of Esculapius, and located in the community where he now prescribes for the bodily ills of his neighbors. He now resides on the farm where he was born.

Notwithstanding the fact that he has practiced so many years, and is now in hs 79th year, the old patrons are not yet ready to dispense with his services. He is still fairly active in the practice.

MINERAL WELLS HAS HEAVY OUTPUT OF CONCENTRATE

Development larger than ever before in the history of Mineral Wells is being made in the manufacture of crystals from the mineral water there. Large new plants have recently been completed by some of the largest hotels there as well as substantial additions to several of the water companies. Seven plants are in operation and the output the last twelve months was in excess of half a million pounds. The product retails at an average of more than one dollar per pound, and all the plants are kept busy.

The natural water is condensed by a plain process of evaporation and the mineral content crystalized. It is sold for medicinal purposes, and is shipped to every State in the Union, Indications are that the production for the coming year will double or triple the last year's

FEDERAL BUILDING FOR TWO STATES

The Treasury Department has let the contract for clearing the site for the new Federal building for Texarkana, and the bid for construction will be awarded not later than December 1. Congress has appropriated $790,000 for the new building, which will house the post office. Federal courts and other governmental

An unusual feature for the new building will be twin quarters for the Texas and Arkansas Federal Court jurisdictions, separated on the State line by a solid fire wall. Though it will be possible to buy a stamp in Texas and mail the letter in Arkansas in the post office quarters on the first floor, passage over the State line on the court house floor will be possible only by going down stairs. There will be no connecting door in the wall dividing the courtrooms of the two States. There will be separate court rooms, judge's chambers and marshal's offices for the two State Jurisdictions.

No such distinction is drawn in the post office, one office serving both states. The present postmaster is an Arkansas appointes, but his predeceasor was a Texan. Separate post offices for te two States have not been maintained for ever 40 years.

CHECK OF NON-WORKERS KEPT

The people of Bryan adopted a splendid plan for keeping up with people who could not find work and those who did not want work. A list was prepared of all idle people who were asked to pick cotton and refused. Those who refused to go to the cotton patch and pick at the prices which prevailed were notified that they would not be helped by the community chest during the winter months. The list was turned over to the city officials and the charity organiza-

MART WOMAN'S RECORD IN TO-MATO CULTURE

Mrs. E. C. Goorman, of Axtell, Mc-Lennan county, made a very successful record in tomato culture this year. She had a plot of only two-thirds of an acre in tomatoes, yet she realized a profit of $138.10 therefrom, and the county agent says she realized the largest profit on the size plot in the county.

The profit resulted after deducting $7.65 for seed and $7.50 for labor. She sold a few plants. Some of the tomatoes were sold in the market and others were canned.

WINS FIRST PLACE IN AGRICULTURE

At the Tri-State Fair held in Amarillo, Texas, September 21-26, the Randall county agricultural exhibit won first place for the fourth consecutive year. The exhibit was in charge of County Agent W. H. Upchurch, This was the sixth blue ribbon he had won in eight years of exhibiting at the Ama-

DISCUSSING PLANS TO MINE GRAPHITE

A meeting of business men of Burnet, Austin and Dallas was recently held at Burnet for the purpose of viewing the Burnet graphite mine and making an inspection of same. Plans for a corporation to purchase and operate were discussed. Among others attending the meeting was an experienced graphite plant operator from Alabama.

This plant is owned by the Tennessee Coal Company, but it is understood that an option to purchase same has been obtained. The graphite mines were operated for a number of years and proved a great asset to Burnet and the surrounding country, keeping a large number of employes on the payroll,

QUEEN OF TRAIL DRIVERS DEAD Mrs. Amanda Burke, who was known as the "Queen of the Old Trail Drivers," died a few weeks ago at "LaMott Ranch," 25 miles east of Cotulla, where she had lived since 1876.

This interesting lady, who was so. closely associated with the cattle industry of pioneer days, moved to the La-Mott Ranch with her husband in 1876 was considerably smaller than the genfrom Nucces county, Mr. Burke died a veral population increase of the State, year later, and since his death Mrs. Burke has had complete management of the property. Since her husband's death Mrs. Burke has purchased more land and added materially to the acreage of the ranch, which originally consisted of only four sections. The ranch is stocked with cattle, goats and horses.

Mrs. Burke, when a young woman, accompanied her husband on a trail drive to Kansas markets with 4,000 beeves. The start was made from Banquette. and the journey required three months. On the trip she swam her horse across swollen streams, experienced a prairie fire and witnessed numerous storms which were accompanied by stampedes of the cattle. When her husband died her ngarest neighbor lived eight miles a way. However, she took over the management of the large property and manned it successfully from the beginning.

In 1890 Mrs. Burke had a large modern homeerected, the same now being ranch headquarters. For the erection of this home she purchased 60,000 feet of lumber ir Lake Charles La., which she had shipped to Cotulla and from there hauled to her ranch. The operation consumed seven months.

At the time of her death Mrs. Burke was 92 years old. She was a member of the Old Trail Drivers' Association and always attended the annual meetings.

8,500 ADDED TO NORTH TEXAS METHODISTS

At the recent meeting of the North Texas Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the records of the statistician showed that since the previous annual conference approximately 8,500 members had been added to the Methodist churches within the bounds of the conference. Of the new members, 3,500 were by profession of faith and 5,000 by letter.

BOY WEIGHED OVER 16 POUNDS AT BIRTH

Not long since a baby boy was born unto Mr. and Mrs. Hilary Roberts, of Brady, that so far as known breaks all records in Texas for weight at birth. The youngster tipped the beam at 16 pounds, three ounces, without any clothing at all. The weight of the youngster is attested by Dr. Granville. the attending physician. This gives young Mr. Roberts a place at the head of the list for heavyweights.

ESTIMATE OF TEXAS PECAN YIELD

In the latter days of September the Texas pecan crop for 1931 was estimated by Carl H. Robinson, senior statistician of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which is maintained at Austin by Federal and State governments, at 32,000,000 pounds. Later estimates by certain well known pecan growers of the State have placed the pecan yield at a lower figure.

If the estimate of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics holds good the crop will be much larger than that of last year. In 1930 there were only 9,500,000 pounds harvested for commercial purposes and pecan growers usually estimate on this basis. The five-year average, from 1925 was 21,189,000 pounds annually, Mr. Robinson's figures show. The annual percentage of crop, it is said, is one-third of what the average tree would normally support and mature.

The low percentage, it is said by pecan men, is brought about by the trees being congested in many native groves. They claim that if the trees were thinned out the State's production would be much higher.

TEXAS ILLITERACY

In relation to the total number of illiterates, Texas fell back two paces in the list of States in the decade ending in 1930. The census reports show an increase of 12,277 in the number of persons who can not read or write, and the State's place as 38 in this respect. The total number of illiterates in the State was 308,121, as of April 1, 1930.

There are several factors which, while they do not dispose of the fact of these illiterates, nevertheless must be considered in comparative discussion. One of them is that the increase in illiterates so that illiteracy in 1930 was smaller on a percentage basis than in 1920. The percentages were 8.3 in 1920, and 6.8 in Another factor is the great increase in immigration from Mexico during the ten-year period, this immigration being largely composed of unschooled adults. The significance of this factor is reflected in the census figures showing that 163,882, greatly more than half the total number of illiterates, were Mexican immigrants. The one other large block in the illiteracy figures was that of negroes, this accounting for 90,225 of the total number who are unable to read or write.

BEGINNING OF COTTON INDUSTRY IN TEXAS

The beginning of the cotton industry in Texas was in the year 1826. This was just 43 years after the cotton industry may be said to have been born in 1783, when Eli Whitney, a commercial yankee, accepted the invitation of Mrs. Nathaniel Green, widow of General Nathaniel Green, to visit her South Carolina plantation, where she laid before him the need of a machine to separate lint cotton from the seed. As is well known, in a very few days Whitney presented his model of the cotton gin, which is now 150 years old, and has been but little improved upon. The patent papers for Whitney's model were signed by George Washington, who, with many other men prominent in the nation, became stockholders in the corporation formed to exploit the inven-It is said that Jared Groce was the father of the cotton industry in Texas. He came to Texas from Virginia in 1821 and planted the first cotton at Groce's Ferry, near Hempstead, at the spot where General Houston crossed the Brazos and camped before his march to give combat to General Santa Anna at San Jacinto. Groce's son, Leonard Groce, on this plantation in 1826, contracted with J. R. Harris, founder of Harrisburg, to deliver to him about 100 bales of cotton. This was carried through the wilds of Houston to Harrisburg, now a part of Houston, and was the first crop lot shipment in Texas. It was carried by boat to Galveston, then by boat to New Orleans, thence to eastern ports, where a part of it was ex-

According to the Department of Agriculture of the Republic of Texas, the entire production that season was only 331 bales, so that this shipment was one-third of the entire yield of Texas. The cotton industry of Texas developed quickly. It started in the rich soil of the Brazos bottoms, on Oyster Creek. Cane Valley, Trinity and other bottom lands. In those days only slave labor was

GREAT COLLECTION OF NATURAL CURIOSITIES

Albert Boenicke, who lives at Brownwood, has a wonderful collection of natural curiosities, largely composed of animal skins and heads. Mr. Boenicke is neither a great traveler nor hunter; in truth he has traveled and hunted but little, but he is a taxidermist with a great hobby for collecting.
When he desires to add a new animal to his collection, he does not arm himself with gun and go for a hunting expedition, but he has a plan that is even more successful. He consults his map and locates a town near the habitat of the animal or animals desired. He then addresses a letter to the postmaster of the town, asking that some successful hunter be informed that he desires the skin, and perhaps the horns, of certain animals. The letter is turned over by the postmaster to some hunter who enters into correspondence with Mr. Boenicke, informing him that he can supply his wants and names the price. It is not long until the desired skins and horns are delivered to Mr. Boenicke at Brownwood, and he mounts the hide upon a frame and soon has it ready to be placed among his hundreds of specimens.

In this way specimens from all over the world have found their way to the home and collection of curiosities of this taxidermist. Represented in his collection are specimens from Lapland, Greenland, Alaska, Canada, British South Africa, Brazil, Siberia, India, Mexico, China, the islands of the South Sea, as well as from all sections of the United States. In this way he has n o t only collected a wonderful museum of natural curiosities, but also a wonderful animals on display and their habitats.

At present the collection includes in mounted heads, 300 deer, eight elk, five moose, two reindeer, three mountain sheep, two Rocky Mountain goats and ten are also nine sets horns, nine pairs of buffalo horns, one each of mounted elk, moose, chamounted deer. There are also lion, leopard, bear and fox skins and many other curiosities in the way of old coins and a collection of more than 2,000 Indian

arrow heads

USED CIGARETTE LENGTHS TO MEASURE LANDS

It is said that Omohundro once traced the boundaries of an old Spanish land grant in which the distances were measured in cigarette lengths. A cigarette length was the distance that a Mexican traveling on a burro could go while smoking one cigarette. GOVERNMENT BUYS HELIUM GAS LAND

The United States government has purchased 11,833 acres of land in the Cliffside helium gas structure near Amarillo, in the southwest section of Potter county.

The land was purchased from the Humble Oil and Refining Company under a contract that gave the company the privilege of developing any oil wells the government might discover while drilling. Title to the tract included all gas and oil rights and one completed well. The purchase completed the 52,-000-acre tract sought by the government as a permanent supply for the huge plant located five miles west of Amarillo.

It is said that the purchase of this land insures protection against the structure being sapped of helium. No drilling can be done except by the gov-

LETTER WRITTEN BY SAM HOUSTON

Dick Locke, a business man of Mineral Wells, has in his possession a letter which was written on May 8, 1851, by Sam Houston, to a friend, Nicholas Deane, of New York. The letter was written from Huntsville on the date mentioned, and is in a splendid state of preservation in spite of its age. The letter was given Mr. Locke during a recent visit to New York City by a grandson of the man to whom it was written. A portion of the letter is reproduced below. The excerpt shows the old patriot in a new light, showing clearly that he was delighted with the work of farming and the rearing of his children, and that he entertained a growing distaste for politics: "I write but seldom, and hence it is that I have not written to you very often. This month 35 years ago you and I became acquained in New York, and you a. showed me the Royal Charter in your office. While, though my life has been one of strange vicissitudes, and dark clouds have often shrouded my horizon in deep gloom, almost bordering on despair, I never have adverted to the circumstance of our acquaintance and my short stay over in New York, but what it appeared to me as a joy without sorrow. Years have rolled away and we are yet on the stage, acting in the busy scenes of men. But, my friend, I assure you, when I am at home in my woodland residence, with my wife and brats, I feel no disposition to return again to scenes of official conflict and disputation. Nevertheless, I have yielded so far to my friends as to agree to return, if spared, and serve a part of the next session of Congress, but not for the entire session. I would have to be absent for at least eight, but probably ten months. This is too long an absence for a man who loves his home and family.

"You might suppose that mine must be extremely pleasant. Well, I think my family are so, and that adds charm to my rustic habitation. But why tell you of it at this distance? Come and see us. I will. with my 'gude wife,' pledge you a hearty and cordial welcome for your visit. There is no one we would be more delighted to see in our 'log cabin' than our friend, Mr. Deane.

"Thine truly, "SAM HOUSTON."

knowledge of the HOW EARLY TEXAS RAILROADS WERE BUILT

money to build the roads were resorted to. The people of the State rendered much help in the work by individual gifts. When a line of railroad was projected, committees in every community through which the proposed line would pass got busy and solicited every citizen for a contribution. The people being few in number, and most of them poor, antelope. There their contributions of course did not go a great way in the matter of providing of locked deer funds for building such an expensive thing as a railroad, but they helped. The people also helped by purchasing stocks of the railway companies. In many instances the planters took their teams mois, and 15 and slaves and assisted in the work of making excavations and dumps, taking their remuneration for the same in stocks of the company. Cities and counties also issued bonds for the benefit of the railroads. The State also gave aid to the building enterprises by making loans from the school fund and in using the money belonging to the school fund in purchasing the bonds of the railway companies.

Know Each Cow Roughly speaking, milk production, whether for sale as fluid milk or as cream, may be divided into two classes. The small herds with a few cows, kept to furnish part of the farm income, and the good-sized herds expected to furnish 40 or 50 per cent, even a larger percentage of the farm in-supply of our country is produced by the small herd owner who, usually does not at-smaller herds is due to the lack of deter-mination to know what each cow is deing, PRODUCTION. When it is true, as it usually is, that the cow producing 300 or more pounds of fat usually does it at from 25 to 50 per cent less cost per pound of fat than the cow producing 175 pounds, there is no surer way for the individual farmer to in-crease his profit than to be milking cows which yield at least 800 pounds of fat

These times, when the selling price of almost every known product at least from the farm is down, in spite of efforts to raise it, the only ones to have a profit at these lower prices are those who can get their costs of production below selling price.

In the manufacturing and merchandising business of our cities this is the test of survivorship. The cost of business must be lower than the price which can be gotten. The volume must be big enough to yield an existence. Mr. Weolworth insists on a small profit on each of millions of articles, Ford gets a small profit on millions of cars. The Rolls-Royes and Fackard and other de luxe cars get a large profit on a few cars. These principles are applicable to the dairy business.

Jokes to Make You Laugh

How He Came to Be Discharged She: "How did you come to be discharged from the Army?"
He: "Well, when the enemy was a-coming toward us, our captain yelled, 'Shoot at will!' and not knowing which one to shoot at, I asked the captain 'Which one is Will?'

He Was Following
"Yes, my friend," said the theological lecturer, "some admire Moses, who instituted the old law; some Paul, who spread the new. But, after all, which character in the Bible has had the largest following?"

As he paused, a voice from the back shouted, "Ananias."

Politeness vs. Tact Ebenezer went to Theophilus to get him to explain the difference between politeness and tact. "De difference am dis way," ventured Theopilus, "I goes up room 1010 in de hotel whar 'Ise employed to delivah de baggage. Dere were a female in dere takin' a bath. I says, 'Excuse me, sah!' an' withdraws. De 'Excuse me' war politeness and de 'sah' wah tact."

The Manager's Office

"Where is the manager's office?" asked the salesman.

"Follow the passage until you come to the sign reading, 'No admittance.' Open the door and go upstairs until you see the sign, 'Keep out.' Enter that door and go ahead until you see the sign, 'Private'—then open that door and you will find the manager.'

The "Leisure Class"

An Englishman observed to an American abroad, "Deucedly pushing country, your h'America; but h'it's too bad weally that you 'ave no titled leisurely class, don't you know—a class quite removed from trade, don't you know."

'We have 'em all right, all right," said the American. "We call them tramps!"

The Cop Must Have Fainted She had done everything wrong. She had disregarded the signal lights, then stalled in the middle of the street, and before starting had taken out her powder puff and started to apply it to her face. An irate traffic cop rushed up: "Say, do you know anything at all about traffic rules?"

Why, yes; what is it that you want to know?"

Firing Squad

The firing squad were escorting the soldier who had deserted to the place of execution. It was a dismal march in the murk of a drizzling fall day.

What a terrible morning to die, yes?" muttered the prison-

"Whattaya got to kick about? asked the sergeant-in-charge, "We've got to march back back through all this rain!"

Levee "Busted"

The transport stole out of Hoboken at dead of night. When the colored troops came up on deck at reveille early the next morning, the Atlantic, so gigantic, stretched away on every side.

An excited doughboy from the Delta of the Mississippi took one look and cried;

"De whole levee's done busted!"

Difficult "John," said the Missus, "explain this tarfif to me."

"My dear," he replied, "that would be harder than trying to explain to you why I was late to dinner and why I didn't have more money when you wanted a new hat.'

The Economy Angle

"How do you like your new little sister?" asked the visitor. "Oh, she's all right, I guess," answered small Robert, "but there's lots of things we needed worse."

From the Back Seat "Have you ever driven a car?"

the lady applicant for a license was asked

"One hundred and twenty thousand miles," put in her husband, "and never had her hand on the wheel.'

Under the Hen

A teacher told her kindergarten class to draw a hen with five little chicks. One of her pupils, Tommy, drew only the hen and one chick. "Tommy, I told you to draw five chicks. You have only one. Where are the other four?" said the teacher.

"Why, that's easy. They're under the hen," came Tommy's They're reply.

Army Contract

Mr. Lincoln used to tell a story about a big Hoosier who came to Washington during the war and called to a bootblack idling along the street to shine his boots

Looking at the tremendous boots before him, the bootblack called out to a brother shiner across the street:

"Come over and help, Jimmy; I've got an army contract!"

Funny Introduction A colored bishop was introducing a white churchman of high rank: "Breddern, it is not often I arise to present a white speaker in this meeting-house. But you can be sure he has a powerful message for you. An' while his skin may be white, his heart is as black as any of us!"

Hunter

Two hunters were charged by a wild buffalo. One got up a tree in a hurry and the other shot into a cave. Every little while the man in the cave would appear at the opening. back in your holê, you idiot!" the chap in the tree shouted as the buffalo snorted below, "git back in your hole!"

"I guess you don't know this hole," the other hunter hollered "there's a bear inside: back.

His Best Story

"Why so blue, Bert?" asked a

"As usual, I forgot to tell the General my best story. It was the one about the officer's question to Private Ephraim—'What would happen, Eph, if there were 10,000 colored soldiers in the first line and 10,000 white soldiers in the second line and the club member.
"As usual, I forgot to tell the German shock troops should suddenly appear?", And Eph, without a moment's reflection, answered: 'Nawthin', 'cept 10,000 white troops might be trampled t' death!"

By F. W. KAZMEIER Poultry Facts By F. W. KAZMEIER Poultry Breeder, Bryan, Texas.

Poultry Outlook

The future for poultry keepers appears very encouraging. At this time no surplus of eggs or dresspoultry is acting as an depress prices. There is a shortage of eggs and dressed poultry in storage, also a shortage of laying hens on the farms, all of these facts help in stimulating prices and as a result eggs and poultry are bringing fairly prof-itable prices. ... will probably be a long time before we again see the high prices of a few years ago. Not only are egg and poultry prices hold-ing up, but feed prices are very low, which is unother factor in guaranteeing a profit in the poultry business. All in all the outlook is very promis-ing for as least the next two years.

The Raw Material

In many sections of Texas there is a great supply of grains, the market ories on grains is exceptionally low. Way not feed these grains to mying hope and growing brollers. I know of no better way to market your gusha than through laying hens and growing chicks. The fact is there is no better way. The only chance of marketing grain at a profit is by feeding it. More net profit is possible now, feeding poultry, than in years of high priced poultry and eggs. This is true because of the low prices on all feeds. I believe I am safe in saying that many people are making more money on their chickens now than they did during the period when prices were extremely high. There was not as much spread between poultry and grain prices then as there is now.

Feed Cost of Producing Eggs Figures from the Government Experiment Farm at Beltsville, Md., show low production costs, as follows: Giving the chickens the proper feed Hawley and care they produced poultry at a feed cost of six and one-half cents McClellan's Service Statio per pound and eggs at a feed cost of six cents per dozen. Since these figures have been compiled grain prices have dropped considerably more.

Use Artificial Light Now is the time to start using light to get more eggs because the normal lay is getting too short and the nights too long, and as a result the hens can not eat enough to lay an abundance of ergs. Make your plans to put your layers under lights, it will mean more which the metal is collecting. At present the United States holds nearly $5,-000,000,000, or not far from half of the total gold supply of the world. This sum-too large for most of us to compass—began piling up in the World War. Since the end of the war, at least, this stream of gold has not been sought either by the government or the bankers. In fact, officials in Washington, mindful of the criticism and resentment abroad which the vast accumulation of gold on this side has occasioned, have taken the trouble to say that most of the increase has been due to the direct wish of citizens of other countries to transfer their wealth to the United

The total withdrawal of gold up to the 15th of October by foreign countries having credit balances here was, $588,224,700.

Curiously, the more gold there is in the country the less the public sees of it. Even the bankers see little of it nowadays, and hold less.

Where Gold Is Kent

Most of the gold is housed quietly. comfortably and, you may be sure, safely in the United States Treasury n Washington or the Federal Reserve Bank in New York. It does not pass back and forth among the banks to any extent. It is received and credited to them when it comes in from abroad. and it is shipped out on their order. That is all the banks know about this glitter-gold is consigned is present, and when keg commonly contains $50,000 worth of ing accumulation which Shakespeare; the transaction is completed his principal gold. Nor do the custodians of this vast sum of concentrated wealth advertise widely its movements, such as they are. Deep down below the sidewalks of Liberty Street in the Federal Reserve Bank of New York is a place known simply as the "cooperage room." The "cooperage room," which gets its name from the American habit of exporting gold in oak casks instead of the wooden boxes generally employed in Europe, is a transfer point for gold transit.

When gold from abroad arrives in the form of American coinage it is sent direct from the dock to the "cooperage room." There is nothing to do but keep tally of it and watch for counterfeitswhich are not frequent—as the impounding boxes are knocked to pieces and the coins, wrapped in linen-covered stacks, are poured out.

An agent of the bank to which the importation. The merchandise stays where it is until the bank orders a shipment sent abroad.

Into the Melting Pot

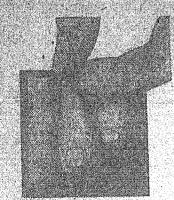

When the importation is in the form of bars or foreign currency instead of that of American mintage, the shipment has to go to the Assay Office to have its value determined, for the percentage of gold in the coins of nations varies. The United States does not store any foreign gold coin. Every piecewhether bristling with the lion and the unicorn of Great Britain or reminding one of the "liberte egalite, et fraternite" of France—goes into the melting pot.

Gold is exported only in the form of American minted coins or as bars. Again the scene is the "cooperage room." Again a representative of the bank concerned is present. The gold is packed in oak kega, either in coins or bars. The bars are worth about $7,000 each, and a keg commonly contains $50,000 worth of pals are credited with the amount of the rately tied and sealed. Then they are sent up the elevator to the street to be whisked away to the steamship.

No publicity is sought for in connection with the trip to the dock, and the gold is insured in two ways. That is, the shipment is insured by underwriters against loss and is further protected by moving it in a closely guarded armored car. The steamship puts the gold in a safe or in its bullion room and watches over it throughout the voyage,

.Thus gold is moved when it has to be, but a vast amount of it continues not to move at all, idling away its days in cool, quiet American subcellars while worried nations across the seas would like to get it by the scruff of the neck and put it to work. Of that drama the average American is oblivious. Gold has no concern for him while the currency he carries continues to pass in the usual way. He asks no questions provided that the solled engraving of the placid Washington or the thoughtful Lincoln which he proffers at the bakery is accepted for customary amount of break.

COFFEE GROWERS SHOW COTTON PRODUCERS OF TEXAS WAY TO PROS-PERITY THROUGH QUALITY

Although no cotton farm ers were present at the meet ing of the Foreign Trade Club recently at the Adolphus Hotel, Dallas, Dr. Charles H. Cunningham, speaker of the day, gave a striking illustration of how the cotton farmer of Texas can work his way out of the present price dilemma. Bolled down to its essentials, his formula for restoring the Texas cotton industry is through quality rather than quantity of staple.

Dr. Čunningham, who has spent the greater part of the last ten years in the foreign commerce service of the United States government, did not discuss the Texas cotton situation. Having been out of Texas for that time during which he served as trade representative in various Spanish speaking countries, he perhaps felt that he could make no direct comments on cotton. His comments on coffee, the staple crop of Brazil, furnished the illustration.

While the producers, politihians, bankers and economists of the great South American Republic are struggling with the greatest surfeit of coffee in history and the price is down to a record low, the Central American Republic of Guatemala is prosperous as a result of its coffee production.

"There is no question but that Guatemala and certain other Central American countries are today the most prosperous of all Latin America, probably of the entire Western Hemisphere," said Dr. Cunningham. "The reason is that the coffee they produce is so superior to that produced in Brazil that Guatemala coffee is bringing 18 cents per pound today, while Brazilians are actually carrying millions of pounds of their surplus out to sea and dumping it there.'

DEAR FRIENDS:

Do you know it is almost Christmas time? Yes, it is just around the corner. From reports all over the country this will NOT be a very MERRY Christmas in many homes. However, I am sure that where Santa Claus cannot leave a great deal in gifts we can, at least, help him to leave sunshine. Therefore, I am going to reorganize the club a little earlier this year so we will surely have members on the roll that are eager to work and bring Christmas cheer to the Shut-Ins. I have found it necessary to give new numbers once a year: In this way, members that do not keep up the club work and forget to tell us so, will not disappoint Shut-Ins by having their number called and no sunshine sent. Won't you please send in your renewal just as soon as our letter reaches you? We want every member of the club to renew membership and would like to have a whole lot of new ones, too. You will receive membership cards with new numbers as soon as Aunt Mary can get them out-before the Christmas issue of your weekly newspaper. We want to make this the best Christmas possible. So, let's start the sleigh-bells ringing

As ever, with love, (Signed) AUNT MARY.

SUNSHINE FOR SHUT-INS CLUB NEWS

There are not a great many letters this month and you don't know how I have missed them. Wish we could induce more of the Shut-Ins to write letters to this page and tell their experiences. Tell us what you do—what you like to read—what the Sunshine Club has done for you and just everything about yourself. Aunt Mary loves to hear from the members, too, and enjoys every letter.

Lillian M. L. Schulze, Floresville, Texas, writes that she did not receive her membership card. We are so sorry; it was sent a long time o and must have gotten lost in When you do not receive your membership card within a reasonable length of time after sending in for membership please write to Aunt Mary again. We always regret delays and mistakes and shall do all in our power to make everything right.

Beulah E. Lamb, Hazel, Kentucky, writes that she is about the same. She says, "You do not realize the good this club can do." Yes, dear Beulah, it is only possible for it to do good because of wonderful women like yourself,

A beautiful letter reached me the other day that had been a long time in the mails. I hope the writer will forgive me for not answering it sooner; somehow it must have been mislaid at the postoffice and was delivered two months after being mailed. It was from Lillie Belle Hunt, Buckholts, Texas, telling us of the death of her sister in Waco, Texas. It was one of the saddest and one of the most beautiful letters it has ever been my privilege to read. It sad-dened me that I did not receive the letter sooner so I could have extended to her and her bereaved family my heartfelt sympathy and the love and prayers of the Sunshine Club. Such delays in mail often cause disruption in friendships and misunderstandings among those that love each other. Lillie Belle wrote that she was so sad and lonely, and I am sure that such sorrow is hard to bear. However, Lillie Belle has turned to that greatest source of comfort and peace which await us all who live in the grace of our Lord. She says, "I must forget it and live a life so I can meet her by

It is well to remember your dear sister, Lillie, Belle, in the fullness of her life—in her goodness and dearness—and live, as you say, so that you may meet her "by and by."

Some time ago a Mrs. Charles C. White, and the state of the same ago.

Some time ago a Mrs. Charles C. White, Era, Texas, wrote Aunt Mary about a lovely little magazine that is published for Shut-Ins. I printed a poem from it on this page and told you I would tell you more about it later. Since that time I have received more and more requests to review and to publish articles by writers of various magazines and newspapers published for Shut-Ins. The list of such publi-cations is so long I do not feel I have time to investigate and review each one separately to investigate and review each one separately (and this I would want to do were I to quote from them or publish names of writers on this page) so I have decided in order to be fair to ell, to pass up reviewing any of these publications and just to go on with the simple task of spreading surishine the best I can, with the help of club members, in a simple, inexpensive way. As the club now stands, everyone can help of club members, in a simple, inexpensive way. As the club now stands, everyone can have a part, whether he or she is rich or peor, and that has been by aim through the whole organization. It is not the meney we spend but the glad tidings and good will we can and are willing to bestow. Doesn't that seem best to most of you? Please let me know.

The membership of Mrs. H. D. King, Oklahoma City, Oklah, is sent in by Mrs. S. E. Dahney, DeLeon, Texas, We are glad to have Mrs. King.

There is a dear letter from Aunt Susan of Galveston, Texas. Aunt Susan was in Fort Worth this summer and Aunt Mary must confess she did not have the opportunity to see enough of her. Aunt Susan is one of God's noblewomen. Having had life "chuck full" of sorrow and trouble, she is still able to find joy and mirth and pass it around. She is a living example of "how to take it on the chin" and still have that "wide, wide grin." What a blessed thing it is to be able to laugh through tears, and wear a smile when the heart is breaking. If you do not know Aunt Susan please write her a few lines at 1804 25th St. Galveston, Texas, and you will receive the grandest and most soul-lifting letter you have ever received. Be sure to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope, for Aunt Susan spends all her pennies on the Shut-Ins. Please write our Boys and Girls' Page a letter next month, Aunt Susan.

Mary Ann Terry, Richland Springs, Texas, is a new member that we are glad to welcome. Iva Lee Nichols, Winona, Texas, writes that she had intended to join the Sunshine Club five years ago. We are so glad to have Iva Lee and only wish she might have been with us all the time she has had us in mind. Just think of the Sunshine she could have spread in the last five years! Maybe, some of you are like her-just keep putting off joining our club, from month to month, until the months become years. Why not join now? Alvin Tumlin, Route 3, Weatherford, Texas, writes he does not wish his name dropped from the Shut-In list. Alvin is crippled, but some day we hope he will be well and strong again so he/can run-and play like other boys and girls. We are glad to have you, Alvin. We have received a dear letter from Minnie Lee Green, Honey Grove, Texas, that says she has visited with Aunt Susan in Galveston, has ed some letters from her that she treasures very dearly. We wish you would be a reg-ular member, Minnie Lee. Won't you? Mrs. Sallie Martin, Troup, Texas, had her grandson write to tell us for her that she had received several letters from club members and thanks them very dearly. (I hope Lon will write to the club members for his grandmother, also; he writes such nice letters). Mrs. Martin is anxious to hear from her relatives and old friends, wherever they may be. She says her father was John W. Hamilton and that she was born in Lincoln county, Tenn. In the family were fifteen brothers and sisters. Just think of the fun they must have had. There is a letter from Wauldine Young. Jonesboro, Texas, sending in the name of a Shut-In. We are glad to hear from you again, Wauldine. Glad to know you are going to school by now. Are you still a Shut-In, dear, and are you up and about? Let me know soon.

Velma Ziese, Kenedy, Texas, must be a wonderful girl. I wish that I might meet her. She says in her letter, "School days are here and we are very happy, although the green in the trees is turning golden and winter will soon be here. I am glad, because I like winter best, and I hope other members like it, Most people like spring, but that is the time of year when people feel lazy, and I like to see people full of fun and life." Good for you, Velma. I am glad you love life so well; may you like it to the utmost.

How did you like the mail bag this time?

HOME PROBLEMS

The question of what to give your friends for Christmas or birthdays nced not be a serious one if you like sewing. And they are always cuthusiastic about things large or small that are the reof your handiwork An addition to the ward-robe naturally brings forth tremendous admiration and wonder, and since such garments as aprons, slips, pajamas, chemises and step-ins can be so easily and inexpensively made, you would be wise to start planning now for the balance of the year. For the housewife a lovely apron that will prove ser-viceable as well as beautiful; for the bride-to-be a bit of dainty lingerie; for the younger woman who loves smart things, a pa-jama ensemble. With all this in mind, we have sketched for you today several models that we know you will enjoy making either for yourself or your friends. For the apron there is a large choice of cotton prints that are really lovely and not at all costly; for the slip, colored crepe de chine, particularly tan is quite as popular this season as pink and white. The pajama gives you a wider range—cotton and flannels for durability and warmth, silks for beauty. We've added a cunning frock for a small girl because we couldn't resist it, and such a gift would be acceptable at any

Pattern 1057

An apron can be as attractive and becoming as it is useful and here is a model that proves how charming, a woman can look working about her home. It is easily and quickly made if you bind the raw edges with ready-made binding. The neck band is much more comfortable than straps, and note, too, how the skirt part buttons over in back to give full protection to the frock. Sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires two yards of 39-inch fab-

Pattern 1087

For the smart school girl, an adorable onepiece frock with side-pleated skirt. You may have long sleeves as shown in the large sketch, short sleeves, or omit the sleeves entirely and finish the armholes with bands, as shown in the small back view. The instructions with the pattern explains each method. The original was made of red wool crepe with white pique collar, belt and front panel. Size 8 requires 21/2 yards 36-inch fabric and 11/2 yard trimming.

Pattern 1051 To insure the perfect fit of your new frocks, make this lovely slip of just two parts and shoulder straps. A pleat at the lower part of each side seam adds flare and gives ample freedom for walking. The garment may be lace trimmed as illustrated, or tailored by hemming the edges. Sizes 16, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40 and Size 18 requires 2 3/8 yards of 36-inch

The sketch shows the details very clearly, but let us suggest that this jacket pattern is smart enough to be used over and over again for dress and suit ensembles. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 14 requires 4 7/8 yards of 36-inch fabric.

Every day we pick up the daily paper and Every day we pick up the daily paper and find there recorded the many strange and wonderful things that are coming to pass in "these times." A close observer of human nature can read on the faces of men and women the wonderment and doubt of "these times." The many magazines are full of suggestions on how the best to come the paper of the paper of the paper. to better our lot. Being a lover of all man-kind, and especially little children, I am going to venture my word—throw it as a challenge, as it were—in the face of "These Times." The expression of "these times" was suggested to me from "listening in" on many hard times

Just a few years ago the whole world was thrown into a turmoil by the great World War. All the bars of civilization, of culture and of class were thrown down. Mankind entered into a common bond for personal protection—this was justifiable. The son of the candle-stick maker was on an equality with the son of the banker—this was necessary, too. However, when the war was over—and the men returned from the battlefield to the plow—and women returned from the nursing staff and the canteen service back to the dish pan and Mon-day's wash-it was all different. Both were accustomed to the thrill and excitement of battle. Back in the old home was that quiet and peace that they had longed for on the front line, but when it became an actuality it was not "quiet and peace," but rather dreariness and boredom; so they became dissatisfied. That dissatisfaction has been allowed to grow; that longing for the excitement of battle has become so intense (like other diseases it is

SIMPLE AIDS IN HOME NURSING (Continued From Last Month)

I have told you as clearly as possible how to give simple care to the sick in the home. That is, how to make up a bed, how to bathe a person, how to take pulse, temperature and respiration, and how to keep a chart. Are there any questions on these subjects you would like to ask? If there are, write to the address at the end of this article. These are the most important things for the untrained home nurse to know. I wish t were possible for every mother to have at least the first three months of hospital training. The system taught regarding daily routine is well worth the time and effort. There are a few other things I wish to tell you about home nursing. Because of lack of space these suggestions are of necessity very

First we shall consider emergencies. Let me urge first, last and all the time, KEEP YOUR HEAD. It doesn't matter how much you may know, or what you have to do with, when you loose your head and get highly nervous and excited the best thing you can do is to get out of the way and let someone who has a cool head do the treating. If you get excited you may be sure you will do more harm than good. When the emergency arises in the home, do not run out in the street or road, and yell for help and fill the house with strangers and friends, because, as a rule, the fewer present the more successful the treatment. Quiet is the first law to remember. Should a crowd collect, dispense with them as quickly as possible over if they got a name about it sible, even if they get angry about it.

Bleeding is the most common emergency. When the bleeding is from a vein it is not serious and may be recognized by the dark color of the blood and the flow, which is even and steady. dark color of the blood and the flow, which is even and steady. Apply a constrictor below the wound. Disinfect the wound with iodine or mercurochrome, which also helps to stop bleeding. Do not leave a constrictor on very long, because the stopping of circulation may cause ill results. Where bleeding is from an artery, it may be distinguished by the bright red color and by the spurting jets by which the blood leaves the wound. Arterial bleeding is much more serious and should have prompt attention. Send for the doctor and then apply first aid. Here the constrictor is put on above or between the wound and the heart. Where the wound is on a limb, one may often flex at the joints with a pad between them and then bind the part wounded. In the case of either wound, disinfect as soon as possible. It is permissible to wash wounds with warm water that has been thoroughly boiled, or that has had one teaspoon of Lysol, or any other good disinfectant, to one one teaspoon of Lysol, or any other good disinfectant, to one quart of water. Where the wound is large and open and the edges cannot be drawn together with adhesive tape, it may be packed with sterilized gauze or clean soft rags that are sat-contagious) until we have become a milling, stampeding human herd of cattle. We have not been thinking—we have not been loving—we remedy for such a mad restlessness—for such unrest—and that is to "come back to the quiet and peace of the old-fashioned home." All the civilization of the world, all culture, all progress is based on the home. The home is the foundation of every good and useful idea. Out of the home goes the man or woman that "make" or "break" a world. When home is only a place to keep your clothes—and to catch an occasional snatch of sleep — it is then only a house and NOT a home. One of the great benefits of the business depression that I can town communities will find it easier to hold that love of the family altar by making ence course in nursing; it is too difficult to learn by this method.

Hair that is full of grease and has an odor is due to a gland disorder. Soap and water won't help. Face the truth about your scalp!
