Don't Cuss A Farmer With Your Mouth Full

By Mike Barnett

It's not nice to cuss a farmer with your mouth full. The sooner American consumers learn that lesson, the better off they, and the farmers that put food on their table, will be, according to one who makes his living from the land. After all, this opinionated South Texas farmer says, the general public gives very little thought to exactly where their food comes from. "Everybody takes their food for granted," he relates. "The people that are killing us are in the cities...the people who's children think milk comes from a carton. Q. M. Friday would like to see a change in the public's attitude toward a beleaguered agricultural industry. This fourth generation cotton and grain farmer seeks not sympathy, but understanding and support for his profession. Public mistrust of agriculture has been bred, he maintains, by a national media that would rather deal in controversy than in fairness. Misinformation, he says, is being presented to young children through public schools. And mismanagement of government resources, he feels, has resulted in a bureaucracy out of control.

He says his beloved profession is suffering unfair attacks from all sides. The farmer gets blamed for everything from poisoning the food supply to destroying the ozone layer, he says. And according to Friday, these outside influences are putting the family farm in jeopardy. Environmentalists, the media and Congress increasingly determine how farmers can farm, this San Patricio County farmer maintains.

What's missing from the equation is common sense. And unless common sense is restored, he says, the family farm is likely to become a thing of the past.

Friday would like to set the record straight.

For example, one thing the consuming public doesn't understand is that farmers are not out to poison the food supply or the environment, he says. And consumers are justifiably concerned, he adds, because of sensationalism and misrepresentation by the national media.

Farmers will not pursue profit by misusing pesticides to control crop diseases and insects, he stresses. Their families, after all, are involved in the operations.

"My contention has always been, that my wife goes out there and runs cotton module builders in the summer. My boy's running tractors, my oldest son runs the spray rig. Do people think we're so stupid that we're out there using methyl parathion for deodorant?" he asks.

Then again, there's a basic misunderstanding about pesticide use.

"It's funny," Friday says. "The same people that don't want you to use a pesticide on a crop will run around the house after one fly with a can of Raid, and spray it all over."

But the misunderstandings don't stop with food safety. Another perception is that farmers are feeding at the public trough, siphoning billions of taxpayer dollars to support a lavish lifestyle.

"Everybody thinks that the $58, $60 billion expense or allocation for the USDA comes to me and my colleagues to buy a new Cadillac, when in fact the biggest percentage goes to food stamps, commodity programs for schools, and for university and various experiment station research," Friday says. "In reality though, as I told somebody not long ago, it's heck when your ambition is to have a good enough year to break even."

Friday reminds consumers that farming is not like a store. First, if a farmer loses a crop due to excessive wet weather or from drought, he can't just turn around and reorder. "Twelve months go by before we can recycle," he says. "We can't go back and reload and go back next month or next week like a store, who can call a warehouse and get a truckload of merchandise."

Second, farmers are price takers -- they can't raise their price when expenses increase. "So we absorb the cost," he says.

Many of those costs, he charges, are being unnecessarily added by an out-of-control federal bureaucracy. Friday hints that government bureaucrats have two purposes. "They have no real interest in anything but perpetuating their bureaucracy and advancing their own career," he says.

This results in excessive government regulations, he says, which is "occupying us with administrative activities totally useless and not productive and wasting vast amounts of money. It is just ridiculous as we are trying desperately to continue surviving in an agricultural venture that is challenged on every side by inane and useless regulations."

Methodist Mission Home To Conduct Adoption

Prospective Adoptive Parents are invited to the Methodist Mission

Even with the challenge of zealous government regulations, food safety concerns and uncertain income, the American public enjoys bargain basement prices for the highest quality food.

"We've got the cheapest food in the world...and nobody knows that," Friday says. "Not many people give it much thought that we pay less or our earned income for food than any other country, probably on earth."

He doesn't think it will take a food crisis to reshape the public's attitude toward their food supply. He hopes consumer's stomachs will eventually lead them back to the land.

"People care about farming. They just don't understand about farming," he admits. "We simply want people to understand we're a fairly critical cog in the national well being."

I hope everyone had a nice safe fourth of July. It is a privilege to live in a nation where we can celebrate our independence and freedom. There are some things going on in nation that we don't like, but it is up to each of us to pray for God's leadership and then do everything that we possibly can to make it better. I don't know of any other nation on earth that I'd rather live in.

Rev. Doyle R. Allen New Superintendent Of Brownwood Dist.

A minister from Fort Worth begins supervising United Methodist pastors and congregations this week in Eastland and six other Central Texas counties.

The Rev. Doyle R. Allen, pastor of the St. Andrews United Methodist Church in Fort Worth since 1987, assumed his duties as superintendent of the United Methodist Church Brownwood District. He succeeds the Rev. Charles L. McClure, who becomes pastor of Arlington Heights UMC in Fort Worth.

Bishop Joe A. Wilson of Fort Worth formalized these assignments in Waco during the June 6-9 session of the church's Central Texas Annual Conference.

In his new position Allen is to provide spiritual and administrative leadership to pastors and members of more than 45 United Methodist congregations in Brown, Coleman, Comanche, southern Eastland, Erath Hamilton and Runnels counties. Combined membership of those congregations is more than 9,800.

In addition, Allen is to sit on the bishop's seven-member cabinet. The group helps Wilson administer the 138,000-member annual conference.

A former math teacher in the Fort Worth ISD, Allen was ordained a United Methodist deacon in 1975 and an elder in 1978. He has served congregations in the Dallas, Fort Worth and Waco areas.

Allen earned his bachelor of science degree from Paul Quinn College in Waco, his master of divinity degree from Brite Divinity School at Texas Christian University in Fort Worth and his doctor of ministry degree from Perkins School of Theology at Southern Methodist University in Dallas.

Allen and his wife, Georgia, have two adult daughters.

SOLVE SUMMER BOREDOM

As summer time approaches, parents will be faced with the age old "I'm bored!" statement from their children.

One suggestion is "Why don't you read something?" Although this is a good idea, it is usually not enough to produce results. Parents may have to do a little work to get children to read. The reward for the effort is more than just filling a few empty hours. Summer reading may introduce children to a new way of enjoying life and give a boost to their education. What are some ways parents can encourage their child to read?

Practice what you preach. Let your child see you reading. Children will see by your actions that reading is important. Remember that action speaks louder than words.

An enjoyable introduction to reading is reading aloud. Choose a "good time" to share a book. Extend that text by asking questions about how the story or characters make the child feel.

Establish a family custom of storytelling. Stories may be borrowed from any book the child has read. Storytelling allows the use of language and imagination.

Take a family trip to the supermarket for purchasing magazines of their choice. These could be used as rewards for some house or yard work. By making the trip a family outing, children are encouraged to browse the variety of magazines and may become interested in new and different topics.

Another family trip could be to the local library. Going together to get library cards and becoming familiar with the library encourages children to model their parent's behavior.

Make sure children have a special place in their bedroom for library and personal books. This gives added value to those "special books". It also helps keep track of those library books.

If the child is asking to stay up later at bedtime, be positive and say "Sure, you can stay up for awhile...if you read."

It is important that the bedroom or reading area has adequate lighting for reading. A 100 watt bulb is the most common recommendation.

Use children's questions and natural curiosity to encourage reading. Rather than answering like "what is a turbo charger," try to find the answer in print and let the child read the description.

Use television series or mini-series based on books as a spring board for reading. If the child enjoyed the show, suggest getting the book or one on the same subject.

If the family is planning a vacation get pamphlets and tourist information about the location. Put the child in charge of being the tour guide. From reading the brochures, the child can tell the family about the vacation interest points.

Most of all, remember, summer reading is an adventure and escape from boredom. Share the adventure with your children.

HANDLE CATTLE VACCINES CAREFULLY

The quality, safety and effectiveness of cattle vaccines are greater now than in the past. Producers should carefully approach their vaccination program to continually assure that quality, said Robert W. Field, an associate professor with the College of Veterinary Medicine at Texas A&M University.

"Improved technology in production, better understanding of host immune mechanisms, and more stringent industry and governmental standards have contributed to better vaccines."

Their benefits, however, depend heavily on wise use, and Field made these recommendations to producers:

- * First, design vaccination programs to meet the requirements of each producer. Vaccination requirements in East Texas may differ from those in West Texas, he said.

- * Don't make vaccination programs a substitute for good management practices; instead, complement them by minimizing disease within the herd.

- * Base vaccination schedules on the incidence, exposure and severity of the diseases for which prevention is sought.

- * Vaccines should always be used as directed. Expiration dates should be noted and observed rigorously.

- * Store the products properly at 35 to 45 degrees in a dark place.

- * Be aware of the withholding periods for lactation and slaughter. Additionally, modified live agents are generally harmful to pregnant animals.

- * Use the entire contents within the recommended time and dispose of properly.

- * Use properly disinfected syringes and needles. Chemically disinfected syringes cannot be used with "live" or "modified live" agents.

- * Anaphylactic reactions may occur during immunization, so be prepared.

- * If possible, avoid vaccinating and unnecessary handling of animals already stressed.

- * Use the proper injection site for as little tissue damage as possible," Field said. Avoid intramuscular injections for all injectable products whenever other "labeled" routes of administration are available.

Use the proper techniques of administration, such as the tenting method for subcutaneous injections, he added.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

The final rule requiring pesticide use record keeping for applicators using restricted use pesticides was published in the Federal Register April 9, 1993. Effective May 10, 1993 certified applicators including private applicators will now have to keep records on the pesticides they use.

There is not a designed pesticide use record keeping form. Data that must be recorded for each restricted use pesticide application includes:

1. Brand or product name.
2. EPA registration number.
3. Total amount of restricted use pesticide applied.
4. Location of treatment.
5. Size of area treated.
6. Crop.
7. Month, day and year of application.
8. Certification number of applicator.

All commercial applicators are required to provide a copy of restricted pesticide applications to customers within 30 days of each treatment.

Individuals keeping pesticide use records in compliance with federal law are not required to submit the information to any government entity. Applicators will be surveyed at a later date by officials responsible for developing a national pesticide use report.
