Five Points On Reading To Children

From: Rosemary Wells
Children who read succeed. The most significant part of a child's mental growth between the ages of three and seven is the ability to imagine. Books boost imagination. Our popular television culture degrades imagination.

TV and video are now our national babysitters. But a young child's growing mind needs active play and live conversation. Television puts a child into what neurologists call the passive Alpha state. A child cannot learn from screens because programs are meant to sell products not to teach.

Much like the first news about tobacco and cholesterol early studies now link overdoses of TV, video games and pop music with learning disabilities, attention deficiency, speech defects and aggressive behavior.

Screen watching makes a child a follower in a consumer. Books exist because of the power of human ideas. Readers are leaders and producers.

After a tiring day nothing is more restful than reading with a child on your lap. Reading aloud offers a world of privacy dignity, and love to both of you.

CARD OF THANKS

A Big Thank You, to everyone for your prayers, and all your thoughtful kindness since my accident.

God Bless you for being our friends.

Stenholm Warns AG Critics To Consider Impact Of Wool Subsidy Cuts

U.S. farm programs have brought Americans the most abundant, best quality and safest food and fiber supply at the lowest cost of any country in the world, and yet there are calls for the downsizing or elimination of agriculture programs. Proponents of such cuts would do well to consider what has happened to the sheep industry following the phase-out of the wool program.

Some members of Congress have said the phase-out of the National Wool Act is an example of a "successful effort to de-authorize" a commodity program. One Member of Congress circulated a letter stating there has been no negative impact as a result of ending this program. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Even before the three year phase-out is complete, the ramifications have been devastating and far-reaching. Consider the following: more than 10,000 farm and ranch families have left the sheep business since 1993; the U.S. sheep inventory has dropped 18 percent; lamb imports into the U.S. have risen by 50 percent; and 29 percent of the nation's slaughter and packing plants for sheep meat have closed their doors.

It is expected the total sheep industry will decline another 15 percent in 1995, with total wool production expected to drop another 13 percent. So in the span of just two years, one-third of our domestic sheep and wool industry will be lost.

According to studies done by Texas A&M University, the elimination of the wool act and the resulting loss of sheep numbers will ultimately cost the U.S. economy 21,000 jobs and $1 billion through 1996. The feeders, packing plants, wool warehouses and marketing pools that provide the infrastructure to support the industry will be severely impacted. In addition, there will be a significant loss of tax revenues at the local, state and federal levels, and it is expected the decline in sheep numbers will have a negative impact on rangeland values in some areas.

Proponents of agriculture cuts contend that growth of the world market, and the GATT and NAFTA trade agreements level the playing field and thus make U.S. subsidy programs antiquated. They argue that American agriculture interests should be forced to compete at the global level on the terms dictated by the supposed "free market." The GATT has not created a free market and, in fact, the European Union spends $2.4 billion Annually on support programs for the sheep industry alone—despite GATT. And while other countries limit lamb imports, the U.S. does not.

Few Americans understand that our abundant, quality, safe and cost-effective food supply has been made possible by hard working farm and ranch families and agriculture support programs. American consumers and countless agriculture-related industries have been the beneficiaries of these programs. If additional farm programs are dismantled, the result will be the loss of more jobs, higher consumer prices and increased imports.

A Teen-Agers Prayer

God in Heaven I am young and don't understand what it is like to be a parent, but it must be very hard, because so many people are failing at it these days. I pray for mom and dad, God that You will help them to be good parents - strong in the ways you want them to be, so I can look up to them with admiration and feel confident that their instruction is right. Help me dear Lord to understand my parents. Remind me that when I don't get my way, it is because they love me and not because they want to be mean or deprive me of a good time. Help me God when I become stubborn and refuse to listen, to accept the fact that they have wisdom, and experience,, but I have never been a parent. But in my heart the respect and consideration they deserve for their years of hard work and sacrifice. They raised me as best they could. Let me not repay them with grief or shame. Rather help me to give them obedience, respect, forgiveness and love. Most of all God while I still have my parents here on Earth, help me to appreciate them and let them know that I do.

A simple message to Brighten your Day.
I'm thinking about you.
I care about what happens to you
I want to share your sorrows and sing you joys.
I'm here to talk
whenever you need me.
Know that you are loved.
Have a bright, beaming
better-than-average day!

NEWS OF HEALTH

Skin Cancer—Reduce Your Risk

(NAPS)—With record numbers of skin cancer deaths and record numbers of people flocking to the beach, some dermatologists have found that fun-in-the-sun guidelines can have a greater impact than scary statistics.

"Telling some people, especially teenagers, not to tan is sometimes about as effective as telling someone in a Ferrari not to drive faster than ten miles an hour," says dermatologist Patricia Farris Walters of Tulane University Medical School. "While I never encourage anyone to tan, if you're going to be in the sun, there are ways to minimize the risks."

Understand Your Sunscreen

The American Academy of Dermatology has long recommended that people use a sunblock with a Sun Protection Factor (SPF) of 15 or greater. The higher the SPF, the longer you can stay in the sun without burning.

For instance, if your unprotected skin usually burns in five minutes, wearing a lotion with an SPF of 15 will keep you unburnt 15 times longer than usual, in this case, about an hour. Fair-skinned people with light hair and eyes will generally burn quicker than a person with darker skin.

To use sunscreen most effectively, Dr. Walters advises:

- Apply lotion generously to your entire body at least 30 minutes before you are going to be in the sun, so the lotion has plenty of time to be absorbed by your skin.
- You can't play math games with your sunscreen. If you're wearing an SPF of 10 and put on another lotion with an SPF of 8, your protection won't become 18. Instead, it will be slightly more than the higher SPF.
- Just because the sun isn't out, doesn't mean you're safe from sunburn. About 80 percent of the sun's damaging rays come through on cloudy days.
- Frequent reapplication of sunscreen is key to preventing sunburn, especially if you are sweating or in the water," says Dr. Walters.

Protect Yourself

Even if you are good at avoiding sunburn, there are parts of the body people tend to forget:

- Ears and scalp: Hats are the best protection, but don't think having thick hair will protect you the same way. If it's hats off, use the tip of a cotton swab to apply a sunblock to any side or middle parts in your hair to prevent a sunburnt scalp. You may want to use a facial moisturizer with sunblock instead of sun tan lotion, which tends to be greasy.
- Hands: Don't forget to put a moisturizer with sunscreen on the back of your hands every day. Spotty, sun-damaged hands look twice their age!
- Eyes: Wear sunglasses that protect your eyes from harmful UVB, UVA, and UVC rays. Squinting also causes wrinkles.

"My main message to people is still, 'Don't get a tan!' And if you're going to have fun in the sun, at least play smart," says Dr. Walters.
