Graf is Going Steadily Onward at 63 Miles an Hour

ZEPPELIN DODGING A STORM

Changes Course and Not Expected in N. Y. Until Sunday Night.

By United Press. The dirigible Graf Zeppelin, flying far out of her course to avoid a storm north of the Azores, made steady progress toward the United States this afternoon across the South Atlantic.

The dirigible passed Maderia, 440 miles off the northwestern coast of Africa, during the morning. She was sighted from Funchal, Maderia at 8:30 a. m. Eastern Standard time and maneuvered over the city, spending an appreciable time over the island which is 35 miles covered 1,900 miles from Eckener, the pilot. Friederichshaven, Germany, which she left at 1:51 a. m., = Eastern Standard time, Thursday. It took the dirigible approximately 30 hours to make the journey, or an average of about 63 miles an hour.

Because of the storm the dirigible was expected to continue her southern course, probably continuing to the United States by way of Bermuda and up the Atlantic coast to Lakehurst, N. J., her destination. It was uncertain that she would pass over the Azores, not only because of the troubled weather to the north but also because it would mean a wide northward detour instead of a straight line to Bermuda.

The Azores are about 800 to 900 miles northwest of Maderia.

From Maderia to Bermuda is about 3,000 miles and from Bermuda to New York 681 miles. At her present speed it would take the dirigible nearly 60 hours to make the distance which would get her in New York Sunday night.

The Graf Zeppelin was likely to encounter cross winds and head winds, however, which might impede her progress, weather reports showed.

Steamer.

The steamer reported that on the night of Oct. 3 she struck a submerged object off the Portuges coast. The submarged object was believed to have been the Ondine.

The Ondine left Cherbourg on Oct. 1 for an endurance test run to the north African coast. She has not been heard from since.

DONAHEY QUITS.

Gov. A. V. Donahey of Ohio, who has been the democratic chief executive of a republican state for a good many years, is retiring from politics. He says that he cannot afford to hold public office any longer; the time has come when he must make a little money for himself and his family.

It is almost impossible, says Governor Donahey, for an officeholder to save any money. If he is honest, he says, he has to stint himself constantly, wearing old suits of clothes and guarding the nickels and dimes with great care. Donahey has had enough.

TWO COUNTIES HOLDING JOINT SESSION HERE

Eastland and Stephens Counties Join Forces For First Time In Institute For Rural Teachers.

(Eastland Telegram)

More than three hundred teach ers from the rural schools of Stephes and Eastland counties registered Thursday morning the opening session of the East land-Stephens Rural School Institute. The Eastland school, where the institute is meeting, was a busy scene Thursday, for classes were in progress while the institute was meeting. In order that the institute might go through Friday without any interruption and the best work be done, Superintendent R. D. Bittle announced that there would be no school classes Friday and the Eastland teachers will join in the institute classes.

The Rev. Frank E. Singleton, Methodist pastor, read the Scripture lesson Thursday morning, and the Rev. H. W. Wrye, Church of Christ pastor, gave the invocation. The welcoming address was given
