Which Is Which?

The question is, are week-ends made for marriages or are marriages made for week-ends?

Statistics show that more marriage licenses are issued from Friday to Sunday than are issued all through the rest of the week.

During the last week there were six licenses scattered through the week, while there were eight issued on Friday and Saturday.

Those who have become hardened to issuing the right to marry to aspiring young couples can spot the customers before they enter the office.

Statistics show that the couple passes the office two or three times before entering and when they are once inside they make their wants known in a whisper.

Many of the couples marry right in the office after a hurry call has been despatched to Justice of the Peace Steele. However, the majority prefer to have the minister's wife as a witness rather than the maddening throng that fills the courthouse corridors.

Five Charged With Street Fighting
After Sunday Row

Shades of boom days stalked abroad in Ranger yesterday evening and last night, when a free for all fight, alleged to have been between members of two families, drew a crowd of several hundred people to the vicinity of the Texas Drug Store on Main street and resulted in the Ranger police department having to fight the crowds out of the station, when the participants were haled in to city court.
The fight is said to have started early in the evening and three of the participants later appeared before Justice of the Peace J. N. McPatter. One of these went to his home on Eastland Hill to get the money to pay his fine, according to Judge McPatter, and while there he got tangled up with a member of the opposing family.
The scene shifted again about 7:10 with the setting the same as first set to, and lasted about fifteen minutes during which time eight arrests were made and a plate glass was broken in the Langston Barber Shop.
The participants belonged to two families, with one exception, and eight of the men will appear before the city court at 5 o'clock this afternoon to answer the charges of fighting.
In Justice of the Peace McPatter's court complaints for street fighting on Sunday afternoon were filed against D. B. Hartsfield, Raymond Hartsfield, Bill Healer and J. B. Houghton. No cause for the fight was given, according to the police.

We come pretty near forgetting to gripe today and it might be just as well if we didn't. However, somebody might get sore and cancel their subscription if we missed a day—you can't tell. And I won't.

The joy that spread over the various football camps in the oil field was short-lived when they found out that somebody else had a little say about how old some of the boys are.

Regardless of who plays on the Bulldog squad next Friday you are going to see the scrappiest bunch of kids in the country. It's against our religion to give points but we will gamble a little that the game won't be a scoreless tie.

Randall Blackmon looked pretty good in scrimmage against the Junior college squad the other day. We didn't see the game Saturday against Thurber, but somebody came to us after the game and said "Your player didn't look so good against Thurber." We asked who was our player and he said "That new tackle."

All right, partner. If you want to call him our player now you just have at it and enjoy yourself while you can. We did pick him to make good on tackle position and, by heck, we are going to stand by him.

Randall does lack experience and it takes some experience to cultivate that old fire and fight and will to do. But, boy, he is plenty big and plenty fast and our guess is that when he gets in a game that counts he will come through and no foolin'.

Maybe you noticed where Army beat Davis-Elkins last Saturday. An item of possible local interest in that is that our old friend Honk Irvin is playing with Davis-Elkins.

NINE-YEAR-OLD BRIDE BURNED

That Albert Michel, aged 23, set fire to the clothing of his nine-year-old wife, was charged in Carlton, Australia, court recently. It was alleged that an argument between the two led to the burning.

HEARS TALK BY ROTARY HEAD

Ellis Boyd, Governor of Forty-First District Luncheon Guest Monday.

Ellis Boyd of Fort Worth, governor of the forty-first district, Rotary International, paid the Eastland Rotary club an official visit today and spoke at the luncheon. A business meeting with the officers, board of directors and a number of committee chairmen was held in the forenoon.
In his address Mr. Boyd impressed upon the minds of his hearers the duties, both stated and implied, they, as Rotarians took upon themselves when they joined the club and urged them to meet those obligations.
To further impress upon the members that they were members of an international organization, Mr. Boyd, by the use of a map of the world, pointed out the 41 countries in which Rotary has been planted, giving the number of clubs in each country. Only last week Rotary International was established in Germany, which made the forty-first country it has entered.

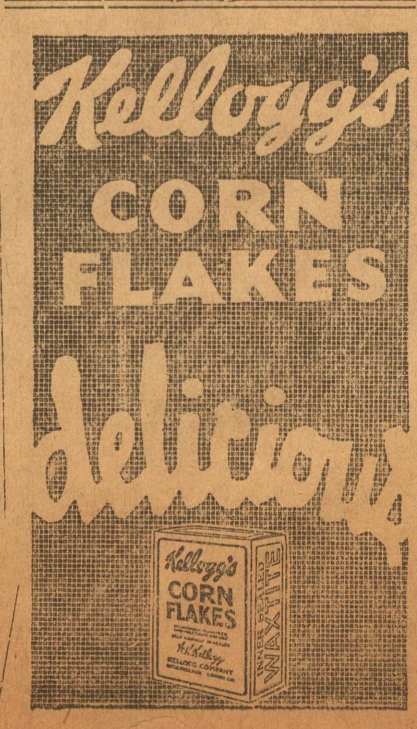

Mr. Boyd told the Eastland club that in this country the forty-first district in Texas of which the Eastland club is a part, there were no other districts that had a greater opportunity for growth in membership, there being at this time approximately 60 prospects for new clubs in the district.

There is no such thing as the most important committee in Rotary, the district governor said. All committees are important.
The speaker urged the Eastland club members to co-operate fully with their officers, to keep up a good attendance record and to live as closely as possible up to the principles of Rotary.
President Weaver of the Eastland club, after Mr. Boyd had finished his address, said, "Mr. Boyd, a man who takes Rotary seriously as I know you do and who gets his compensation from knowing that his work is doing good, will feel well paid for the time and trouble of coming to Eastland and delivering this address to us, when I assure you that we are better men and better Rotarians by having had you with us and listening to your talk."

"It was but recently, when I started to act as master of ceremonies with my band at the Paramount Theatre, that I realized how vital perfect voice condition was to a performer. I have always been a consistent smoker and, fortunately, Lucky Strikes were my favorite brand. I like their toasted flavor and, best of all, I can smoke as often as I like, without fear of irritating my voice, which is becoming a great asset in my work."

WHAT is the quality that Giacomo Rimini, Margaret D'Alvarez, Cesare Formichi, Armand Tokatyan, Emma Trentini, William Faversham, Florence Reed, Paul Whiteman, and other famous singers, actors, broadcasters and public speakers have found that makes LUCKY STRIKES delightful and of no possible injury to their voices?

For the answer we turned to medical men and asked them this question:

Do you think from your experience with LUCKY STRIKE cigarettes that they are less irritating to sensitive or tender throats than other cigarettes, whatever the reason?

11,105* doctors answered this question "YES."

Consider what these figures mean; consider that they represent the opinion and experience of doctors, those whose business it is to know.

UNITED STATES PREPARES FOR FALL-SINCLAIR TRIAL

Three Government Witnesses Are Missing Which May Prove Serious Handicap in Prosecution of Case.

By HERBERT LITTLE, United Press Staff Correspondent. WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—New chapters in the nation's "oil scandals" are to be written in a little courtroom here where former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall and Harry F. Sinclair go to trial today on a charge of conspiring to defraud the government.

This case, the only criminal prosecution to result directly from the famous lease of Teapot Dome naval reserve by Fall to Sinclair's Mammoth Oil company, is unique among the five criminal cases resulting from the 1923-24 senate oil inquiry in that it alone is said to involve new evidence.

The indictment, voted by a grand jury two and one-half years ago charges Sinclair gave Fall and his relatives $230,500 worth of Liberty bonds. Evidence of this alleged transfer was gathered by government detectives after the oil investigation closed. Most of the evidence was given in the government's civil suit to annul the lease.

Trial of this case involves an almost entirely different set of facts than the similar indictment against Fall and E. L. Doheny as a result of the Elk Hills, Calif., naval oil reserve lease. Fall and Doheny were acquitted by a jury here last December. That indictment, and the other cases were brought on facts brought out by the senate investigating committee.

The government's prosecutors, in addition to the handicap of the Fall-Doheny acquittal, also are unable to produce three witnesses said to have been associated with Sinclair in a deal which produced the profit from which the Liberty bond transaction was made.

These three are A. E. Humphreys, Denver oil man who was accidentally killed this year, and H. M. Blackmer and James E. O'Neil, both of whom have been in France for the last two years. Repeated efforts have been made to get them to return to testify, and Blackmer was served with a subpoena this year, his passport later being revoked as a result of his disregard of the subpoena, but apparently all efforts have been unavailing.

Selection of a jury will start shortly after Associate Justice Frederick L. Siddons of Columbia supreme court calls his court into session Monday morning. This will take two or three days, it is expected.

Owen J. Roberts, Philadelphia, and former Senator Atlee Pomerene, Ohio, special counsel appointed by President Coolidge to prosecute the civil and criminal oil cases, will represent the government. Sinclair's defense staff will be headed by Martin Littleton, noted corporation lawyer of New York, and George P. Hoover of Washington, Mark B. Thompson, New Mexico lawyer and ranch neighbor of Fall, will represent the former secretary.

The prominent positions of the defendants, the calling of numerous cabinet members and high officials and former officials as witnesses, and the recollections of the nation's shocks in the oil investigation period, together with the battle of wits and evidence, are expected to make this trial one of the most notable of recent history.

As far as property is concerned, recent navy investigations have shown that reports of the fabulous wealth of the "Dome" were erroneous. Originally believed to contain around 135,000,000 barrels of oil, the 9,321 acre reserve in Natrona county, Wyoming, now is believed to contain not more than 35,000,000 barrels. This is a development since the lease was made to Sinclair's company by Secretary Fall and Secretary of the Navy Edwin Denby in 1922.

Fall, old western rancher and just with bronzed face and long white mustache, is in poor health from an attack of pneumonia last winter. He is 66 years old. Sinclair, noted for his aggressive oil operations in many countries, for his millions made thereby, and for his great Rancocas horse-racing table, is now under a three-months' jail sentence as a result of conviction of contempt of the senate in refusing to answer the oil committee's questions in 1923. He is free on bail pending an appeal, which will be carried to the United States supreme court if the government wins in circuit court of appeals.

His defense is expected to center on the contention that the government has no legal evidence to show that the $230,500 passed from Sinclair to Fall in an effort to influence the making of the Teapot lease.

As to the legality of the lease, the United States supreme court has ruled in the Elk Hills civil case that Fall's attempts to lease navy property were illegal. The supreme court is understood to be delaying its decision in the similar Teapot Dome civil case until after the verdict is reached at this trial, although in no case would be civil suit decisions be admitted as testimony. In the Elk Hills case, the supreme judges found that naval oil must be held underground until congress provided for its removal for national defense purposes.

Sinclair's companies have spent about $5,000,000 in developing the Teapot field, and $20,000,000 more on a pipe line to carry oil from this field and other Sinclair holdings in the west to Kansas City refineries. The Sinclair companies also built an oil storage tank for fuel oil at the Portsmouth, N. H., naval base, under the provisions of the contract, which provided for payment for the crude oil extracted in fuel tanks and fuel oil placed in them. Four or five others were to be built along the Atlantic coast, but their construction was halted by the senate investigation. The $1,000,000 completed plant has been turned over to the navy.

P. F. Walker, Dean Of Engineering Kansas U. Dead

By United Press. LAWRENCE, Kan., Oct. 17.—Finley F. Walker, 52, dean of the school of engineering at the University of Kansas since 1913, committed suicide in his office here early today.

The body was found by a night-watchman making the rounds of the building shortly after 3 a. m. Walker had shot himself through the head with a .32-calibre pistol.

A note found, said, "I hope you won't think I'm a coward for doing this." It was addressed to one of his friends.

Aw! It's Just a Lot of Boloney!

The facts have come out, every effort to hide them having miserably failed. Hot dogs will not wear heavy! this season! But why? Well, W. F. Henderson (inset) has invented a nice light suit for the winners. The pictures, from a Chicago boloney works, show Irene Kaczmarek (above) with a 'lot of boloney,' and (below) factory girls taking the casings out of the dryer to be stuffed.

Bankhead Poultry Association Needs More Cooperation

Many poultry raisers, who are not now members of the Bankhead Poultry Raisers' association would become members of the organization if they were better informed of its purposes, according to Charlie Wende, farmer and poultryman of near Cisco. Mr. Wende was in Eastland Monday on business, and said that he was not a member, but that he would like to know more about the organization and that he was not adverse to joining and co-operating with the members of the association.

Mr. Wende suggested that the officials of the Bankhead association should have more meetings over the county in order that the poultry raisers might have an opportunity to attend and get more information regarding the purposes, plans and policies of the organization.

J. C. Patterson, Eastland county agent, in discussing the Bankhead association, pointed out that additional members were needed in order that the association might do its best work, the volume of eggs now being handled being just large enough to make the cost of handling high, when, if the volume was a little larger the cost of handling would not be much greater and the profits to all concerned would be more.

Alvero Obregon State Department French Tariff

By RODNEY DUTCHER, NEA Service Writer. WASHINGTON—Alvaro Obregon, one of the big men in the present Mexican crisis, and probably Mexico's next president, has only one arm. How he lost the other arm is a good story. Obregon was fighting for control of Mexico with the notorious bandit, Villa. At a time when operations centered at Celaya, north of Mexico City, the situation was more or less precarious. It was at Celaya that Obregon's arm was blown off by a bomb. An eye-witness, recalling the incident, says that the bomb tore Obregon's uniform to rags and covered his body with wounds. It was feared that the commanding general would die.

In the morning, Obregon's officers came to their leader and told him that his soldiers were disheartened and in bad mental condition for a fight. Rumors had spread that he was dead. Obregon, the arm now only a raw stump, went out and mounted his horse and led a revitalized army to a victory which turned the tide of the war.

If the state department had its way federal troops would be chasing Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Seymour Lowman into the mountains just as Mexican troops are chasing the rebels below the Rio Grande.

Assuming that Lowman is allowed to retain his job a few more months, he will have every official in Washington roaring for his gore—just because Lowman tells the truth as he sees it.

Just when it was supposed that Lowman had been effectively gagged after his frank criticisms on the subject of prohibition, which he is nominally supposed to enforce, Lowman turned around and erupted in a new direction, this time threatening to gum up a delicate international situation for the department of state. An extremely important situation, too. The worst of it was that Lowman uttered a few terrible words tending to confirm what many persons regard as obvious facts but which the administration had been denying.

The state department had perspired freely in attempts to show in its notes to France on the new French tariffs that reciprocity had never been a part of this country's policy and that we never bargained over the tariff to the point where we would lower or raise ours when some other nation did as much for us.

Lowman announced formally the raising of the tariff on certain minor articles of import from France and then undertook to explain that this was because France had raised her tariffs. He said:

"The American policy is one of reciprocity. That's our policy. They go up, we go up; they go down, we come down."

Insofar as the tariff law concerning the commodities in question was concerned, Mr. Lowman was dead right. But practically what he did was to repudiate the whole basis of the state department's contention against the new French tariffs. If France were to seize upon his words and flaunt them, it would also have an excellent comeback against President Coolidge's explanation that our whole protest was against "discrimination" for the new rates announced and explained by Lowman were just as much discrimination against France insofar as they went as France's new tariffs are against us.

Pirates Really Never Got Going In World Series

By BILLIE EVANS Two reasons, both logical, can be offered for the poor showing of the Pittsburgh Pirates in losing four straight games to the New York Yankees.

One relates to the power of psychology and the other was an inferiority complex from which Pittsburgh seemed to be suffering throughout the series.

It is my belief that the batting practice in which the Yankees indulged the day prior to the opening of the series, as well as the day on which it started, had much to do with the poor showing of the Pittsburgh team.

Taking their workouts the day before the series opened, Ruth and Gehrig drove a number of balls over the right field barrier at Forbes Field, while other New York batters hit the ball to all corners of the lot.

Pirates Saw Slugging. While all this was happening, the Pirates, who had practiced first, sat in the stands and watched the Yankees give a perfect demonstration of their remarkable batting power.

This may have been a desired gesture on the part of Miller Huggins. No doubt he told the pitchers who worked in batting practice to lay the ball right over. Whatever his instructions, the Yankees couldn't have looked more formidable at the bat than they did that day.

On the day of the opener, I sat on the Pittsburgh bench talking with Donie Bush, while the Yankees took their batting practice. All four Pittsburgh pitchers who expected to work in the series, Kremer, Aldridge, Meadows and Hill, were lined up beside the Pittsburgh bench, watching intently the methods of the Yankee batsmen.

As on the previous day, the Yanks were in a batting mood, slamming the ball all over the lot, also out of it. The psychology of the Yankees' bats undoubtedly had a far-reaching effect on the Pirate staff.

Were Below Form. Throughout the series the Pirates seemed to be suffering from an inferiority complex.

After watching the New York club in action prior to the opening of the series, the players acted as if they believed all the complimentary things that had been written about the American League champions.

With the possible exception of the last game, there didn't seem to be any fight in the Pirates. The team as a whole acted as if they realized New York was a better club and would ultimately triumph.

When two errors by New York in the seventh inning of the fourth game gave Pittsburgh a chance to tie it up, the Pirates momentarily spurred to even the count but two innings later tossed the game away.

Pittsburgh played as if the team had burned itself out in winning the pennant and early conceded in their own minds that the Yanks were the better team. For that reason the series lacked the interest that usually goes with the fall classic.

New York is unquestionably the better team, but in justice to the Pirates, it must be said Bush's club was far below form and never got going.

NORFLEET

WHAT HAS BEEN TOLD

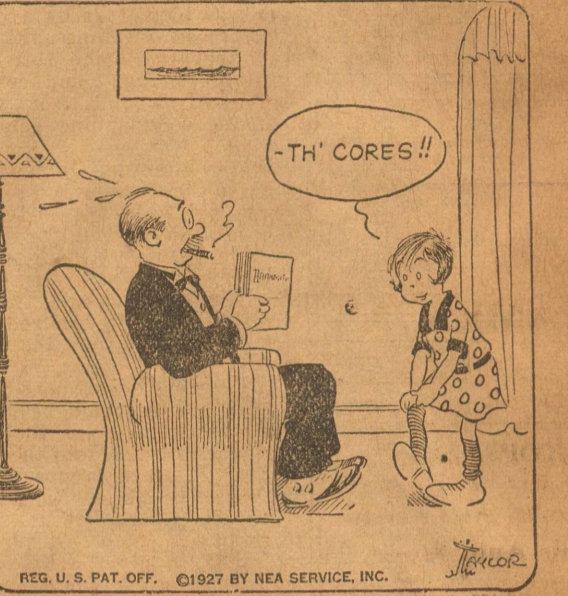

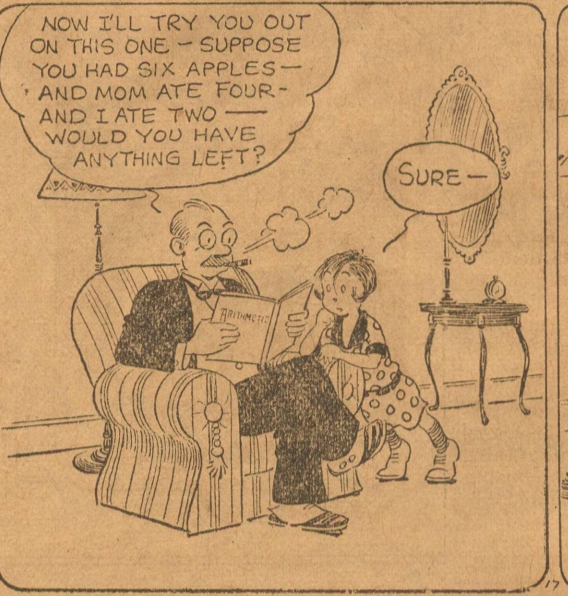

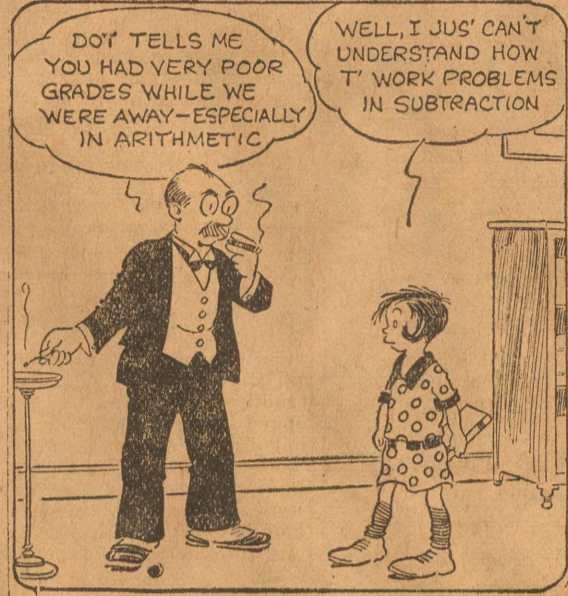

Frank Norfleet a Texas rancher, swindled out of $45,000 by members of a confidence ring, headed by Joe Furey, resolves to break up this gang if it takes his last penny. After considerable effort he finds two of his men in California. They are brought to Fort Worth for trial. Acting on the tip of a stranger, Norfleet hurries to Florida to search for his men. After several disappointing experiences with the police force who seem, in certain cities, to be working with the swindlers, Norfleet hears that a link in the chain is operating at Sanford. He adopts the name of Parkinson and goes there posing as a prospective purchaser of a celery farm and talks rather freely of the large sum he expects to invest and attracts the attention of a man named Johnson, probably an outpost of the confidence ring, who discourages the purchase of a celery farm and induces Norfleet to accompany him to Daytona where the investment opportunities are supposed to be better. En route Johnson suddenly drags Norfleet to the car window and points to a man speeding by in an automobile saying that he would give a great deal to meet the man, who is a "financial wizard." They arrive at Daytona and Norfleet, by a ruse, engages a room for the night in a private home, awaiting to meet Johnson in the morning. Awakening early he peeps out his window and sees Johnson outside on guard as if he were afraid his sucker would get away. After breakfast together they go for a walk on the beach.

CHAPTER 15

We turned and started back toward the town. The stranger stopped a little distance beyond us and sat down on a fallen log. He yawned lazily and stretched out his long form. I could see that he was watching us. As we came nearer, he raised up and started perusing the messages again. Then he got to his feet and started toward us. Johnson apparently noticed him for the first time, for he stooped over and whispered to me: "Look! There he is! What do you know about that? That is the mysterious man I pointed out to you yesterday!—the one I met in Judge

Hughes' office in New York City. I think I'll speak to him and see if he remembers me." "Go ahead!" I urged. As he would have passed us again, Johnson called out: "Hello, Atlantic City!" "Hello, Atlantic City!" That was a signal, I thought. Probably they hadn't agreed on just which game to spring on me. The mysterious one appeared not to hear the call, for he kept on walking, though I noticed that he had slowed his gait somewhat. "Hello, Atlantic City!" Johnson called again. The stranger looked up, as though uncertain that he was being addressed. "Did you speak to me, sir?" he asked of Johnson. Johnson nodded that he had. "Why do you address me as 'Atlantic City?'" the man demanded, indignantly. "Why, pardon me—that's just a habit of mine. I often associate men's names with the cities in which I meet them. I spoke to you that way because I have met you before, and 'Atlantic City' popped into my mind when I saw you. I hope I haven't offended you." He was very apologetic. The stranger scanned Johnson's face; then a flicker of recognition flashed into his eyes. "Oh, I believe I remember you. But say, it wasn't Atlantic City, was it? It seems to me it was in Judge Hughes' office in New York City. "Yes," replied Johnson, "I met you there, but I met you in Atlantic City first."

It seemed to dawn suddenly on the stranger that Johnson was a much more intimate acquaintance than had occurred to him at first; they grasped each other's hands with a warmth that was rather unusual in casual acquaintances. Perhaps it was for the sake of dear Judge Hughes. Then the stranger nodded in my direction and asked in an undertone, "Who is your friend?" Johnson introduced me to the man, saying that I was an acquaintance of his and that he would vouch for me. The con rings are fond of that word "vouch." They invariably use it when introducing a sucker to one of their brethren. The stranger related somewhat in his manner and said he hoped I was not offended; he was always skeptical of strangers and perhaps his manner betrayed him. If so, he was very sorry. Many times he had barely avoided considerable financial losses in his big deals, through the unholly inquisitiveness of newspaper reporters who it seemed, used many ruses to get to interview him. "They're so damned clever, you know, about getting things out of you that you don't suspect you are giving away. I have to be very cautious." We speculated on the stock manipulators have to carefully protect the secrets of our business. Publicity has ruined many a good man."

I wanted to say, "It sure has! Look where Ward and Gerber are!" But I stifled the desire and listened to an old story with interest. Steel could not get away from his telegrams entirely. He would intersperse his remarks to us with muttered repetitions from the yellow papers, almost losing himself in thought as he deliberated on them. Then he would come to with a start and resume his chatting with us. He was anxious to impress me with the thought that his very important business absorbed him entirely. What terrific responsibilities he labored under!

"It's a shame to work any man as my office is working me! Look! There are enough telegraphic instructions for six men to carry out!" He thrust the sheaf of papers under my nose to emphasize his resentment at being overworked. Johnson asked if he was still in the same business, and he replied that he was. He said the markets were exceedingly active and that his firms' transactions kept him whirling about like a merry-go-round. Johnson finally broke into the other's complaint with a laughing request that he place twenty dollars for him, saying that he wanted to buy me a good dinner. "What do you mean?—surely not a little, twenty-case note on the market—" "No, of course not. On the other, you know what I mean." Steel looked amused and said he would gladly accommodate him. Johnson pulled out a big roll of bills, peeled off a few tens, then a twenty which he handed to Steel, saying, in a jocular manner, "Don't lose it for me, now!" Steel took the bill, and after a moment's chat, hurried off down the street toward town. It was a short distance. Johnson and I sat down on the large log where Steel had reclined, and I was given some inside tips on the wonders of the stock market and the way to beat it. Within a half hour, Steel returned. He handed Johnson eighty dollars as if it were a mere peccadillo. Johnson offered me half of the winning, but I refused to accept it. He insisted so urgently that I finally pocketed the forty dollars. Johnson then handed his forty back to Steel and asked him to reinvest it for him. He had told me that he believed he would stick around Steel for a few days and let him make some investments for him. Steel was right accommodating and he smilingly took Johnson's forty dollars. "I don't mind taking the money away from the bookies for my friends—and my friends' friends," he gave me a winning look. "Only I am too busy to run back and forth to place bets and deliver the winnings to you two boys." He flashed the tens, tens again as if to impress us with his lack of time. At least this game had a variation, although it was built on the old general plan. It seemed from his mention of "bookies" that we were to play the ponies or a while. It would be diverting to see the new game unfold, anyway. "The best thing for you fellows to do," Steel went on, "if you want to make a little wad, is to come with me to the club."

"Ah, the plot thickened!" "We have rented the country club on the hill and use it as an exchange. We have splended equipment. Come on up with me and we'll do the work from there. Today's betting is practically all on the horse races in Cuba, and I have a bet early in the morning and returned shortly with the winnings. Many other little raw spots showed up in their work. Perhaps they were not yet regulars—just apprentices. I was rather depressed by contemplation of a possible dangerous trap. The road was lonely. I don't remember that we passed another car on the entire trip of several miles. Tangled jungles bordered the smooth road and everything was oppressively still. No one said a word. The sound of the purring motor was magnified in the deafening silence. Suspense! There is nothing so terrible, I had rather be in the midst of an active gun battle than to sit and wait for it to begin. My tongue grew thick in my mouth and my breathing was almost stifled, as if something were closing in round my heart with a gentle, firm pressure that would eventually squeeze the blood from it. In all my life, I have

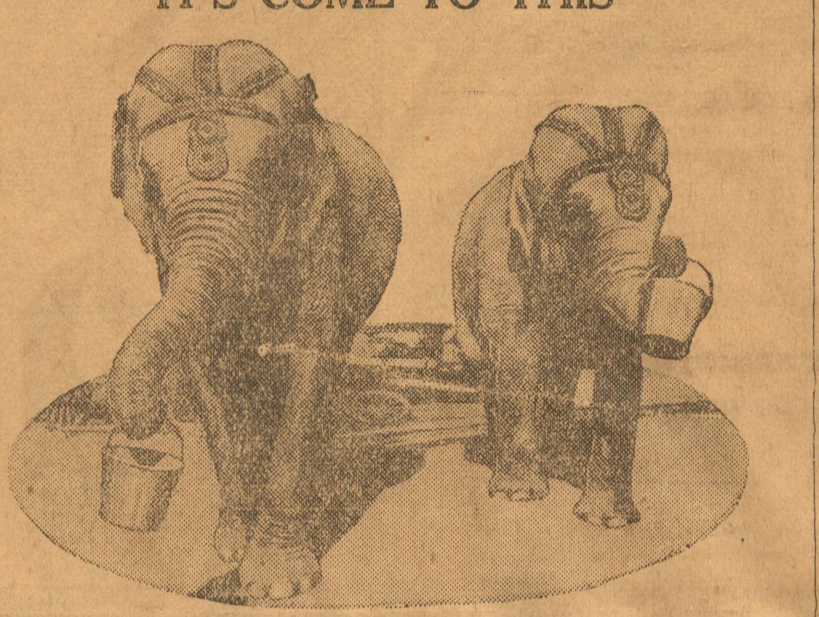

which might have resembled Steel if the top of the head had not been torn off. Steel explained that this was done so that the persistent newspaper reporters could not identify him. He dreaded publicity. Strange! The drive was beautiful, scenic, and the air was warmer than it had been in Sanford, yet the morning was young enough that the sun hadn't driven away that sweet, pungent scent of the new day. On the way I thought of the realities of this pair's work and wondered how I ever tumbled for a similar game as I had. Their work was convincing in many ways, yet it was inconsistent. They had started as if they intended to work the "stock exchange racket," then switched to the racing "rapped-wire game," as old as Methuselah. Steel had left to place a bet early in the morning and returned shortly with the winnings. Many other little raw spots showed up in their work. Perhaps they were

He was co-operating well, at least. Mr. Steel could find no fault with Johnson's part in the comedy. "What do you say, Parkinson?" "Sounds all right to me," I assented, anxious to be agreeable. "Only I haven't many thousands on me. Besides," I added conservatively, "I must be careful and not let the horses run away with my celery farm." A fraternal look was exchanged between the pair. "No danger of that," Steel said reassuringly. Fishing in his leather wallet he drew out a newspaper clipping and handed it to me, telling me to read it if I felt that there was any likelihood of his not knowing his business. As we walked to town to get an automobile, I read the item. It told how he had broken a bucket shop in one day taking out more than $125,000. At the top was a photograph Elephants with the Al. G. Barnes Circus have to carry their own water as pictured here. This photograph was made on the opening day of school, and the members of the legion of small boys who usually see that the elephants do not run short of water were absent. never experienced just the same feeling, before or since. The road spun under us like a narrow ribbon. As we climbed a steep slope, overlooking the sea, quite oddly, I thought of my mother's workbasket. That was queer, I thought. I wondered why it came to my mind. Then I recalled how, when I was small and worrisome, my mother would call me to her knee and place a tangled skein of thread in my hands, telling me I must find a starting place and follow the slender thread through all its twists and turns, undoing knots, one by one, until I came to the end. Was this experience the starting place in my own tangled skein of affairs? Would I have the perseverance or the ability to follow through to the end, in case this were the beginning?

Eastland County Exhibited at Fair Makes Good Show

While there were other counties with exhibits at the Texas State Fair in Dallas that scored higher than did Eastland county, there was only one that anything like equaled Eastland county so far as the exhibit's putting over a story representative of the county was concerned. In other words Eastland county's exhibit displaying the county slogan, "Egg Basket of Texas," at this fair as at other fairs, attracted more attention than other exhibits and thoroughly put across a story connecting the name of the county with the exhibit and the industries it sought to advertise.

As an example of how thoroughly the Eastland county slogan "Egg Basket of Texas," has been absorbed by the minds of the hundreds of thousands of people who view the exhibits from year to year, a small boy too small to see all of the Eastland county exhibit and read the signs on it, exclaimed when he saw the picture on the background, "Look at the boy and little chickens" when the child was asked what county in Texas the hen and chickens represented he replied unhesitatingly, Eastland county.

Due to the fact that the drought and insects cut many Eastland county crops short the exhibits that it was possible to gather at the county camp as favorably with those from other sections as heretofore, but at that Eastland county was scored high on many items. Some of the scores were as follows:

Sweet potatoes, 73 out of a possible 75.
Peanuts, 48 1-2 out of a possible 50.

Vegetables 69 1-2 out of a possible 75.

Fruits, 68 out of a possible 75.
Grain sorghum, 184 out of a possible 200.

Cotton, 166 out of a possible 200.
Oats, 66 out of a possible 75.
Forage, 43 out of a possible 50.

Other crops 95 6-10 out of a possible 100.

Arrangements and decorations, 95 43-100 out of a possible 100.

Eastland county was highly complimented by the superintendent of the agricultural department of the fair for the way the exhibit put over the county's slogan "Egg Basket of Texas."

Geo. W. Briggs, who with the secretaries of the chambers of commerce of Ranger, Cisco and Rising Star, gathered and arranged the Eastland county exhibit, hopes to be able next year to work into the county's exhibit something that will connect the livestock and other industries of the county with the slogan "Egg Basket of Texas."
