OLDEN GAINS IMPORTANCE AS SHALLOW POOL

More Than 100 Wells Drilled There and Only Two Dry. New Pumping Plant.

The completion by the Roberts Oil corporation of an electric pumping plant, said to be second to none in Texas, calls attention anew to operations at Olden, six miles southwest of Ranger, on Bankhead highway, where there is now reported between 1,500 and 1,600 barrels a day production from shallow wells in the 1,450-foot sand and new locations are being made at the rate of from one to three a week. It is a noteworthy fact that this shallow field opened up a little over a year ago, the discovery well being brought in Sept. 19, 1924, has had but two dry holes out of somewhere near 100 wells drilled.

This field was opened up by Dr. H. M. Barker and L. G. Adams, who drilled the discovery well after spending some three years perfecting land titles and laying out the town. Four companies have since operated there, the Roberts Oil corporation, Magnolia Petroleum company, the Teasorth company, two of the Crosby company. Two of these, Roberts and Teasorth, have pumping plants. The Magnolia uses the individual pumping system—an engine and pump for each well. The Roberts corporation is perhaps the largest producer in the field, but the Magnolia is a close second.

Eleven wells are now being operated from the new electric plant and it is stated that it will soon operate 20 wells. A trip is being moved to a new location, Roberts No. 2, on the south side of the Bankhead highway in Olden townsite, and will be in place no later than Tuesday, it is stated.

The oil in these Olden shallow wells average 40 gravity and the wells run around 300,000 feet of gas to the well, producing from two and one-half to three gallons of natural gasoline to the thousand. That deeper drilling is contemplated is stated on what seems to be good authority, but this has not been begun, so far as is known.

Slain Bandit May Be "Dutch" Anderson

MUSKEGON, Mich., Nov. 2.—Chief of Police Hansen of Muskegon said today that the bandit who was slain in a revolver duel with Detective Charles Hammond, Saturday night was "Dutch" Anderson, notorious bandit and former pal of Gerald Chapman. Identification was effected through fingerprint prints, he said. "There is no mistake in our identification," he told the United Press today.

Patrolman Hammond was fatally injured in a hand-to-hand revolver fight with the bandit Saturday night, the encounter following a report to the police that a man had passed a counterfeit bill at a store here.

"We will hold a body of Anderson until federal authorities arrive from Detroit," the chief said. Hammond killed the bandit after he had been fatally injured.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The possibility today sent several postoffice inspectors to Muskegon, Mich., to identify the body of the dead bandit to see if it should happen to be "Dutch" Anderson. The inspectors all knew Anderson.

Three Men Severely Burned In Accidents In Drilling Fields

A cycle of accidents—three of them—all from burns and all strikingly similar in nature, engaged the attention of physicians and nurses at Clinical hospital, Ranger, Sunday. The victims were: George T. Bow of the Humble Pipe Line company, M. R. Walker from the Thompson lease near Frankel and O. B. Ragsdale of the Lightfoot wells.

Bow and Walker were in conversation at the Humble plant at Frankel when someone lighted a match, igniting the free gas. Bow was burned about the neck and left arm; Walker, about the neck and both arms, his right hand somewhat seriously.

Ragsdale's injuries, also burns about the neck and both arms, were incurred from an explosion resulting from carrying a lighted torch at one of the Lightfoot wells.

All three men were kept in the hospital overnight and were able to be taken back to their respective camps Monday morning.

ED T. COX JR. HURT SATURDAY USES CRUTCHES

Physicians Find No Bones Broken and Expect Early Recovery.

Ed T. Cox Jr., star fullback for the Eastland High school football team who was knocked down by a passing automobile and badly hurt while out with a Halloween party Saturday night in Eastland, and who was unconscious for several hours after the accident, was out on crutches Sunday and physicians say he has no broken bones and soon will recover. His father, Ed T. Cox Sr., stated in an interview late Sunday that the fullback will undoubtedly enter a junior college next year, as he has not yet completed his high school course and has played his full four years high school football, which makes him ineligible to play without some special permit which he declines to ask. His brother, Robert Cox, who plays center, will, according to his father, enter a senior college as he will complete his high school course the coming semester.

Surgical Department Clinical Hospital Hsa New Supervisor

Miss Winifred Slaughter of Stephenville, graduate of Baptist hospital of Fort Worth, post-graduate of Charity hospital, St. Louis, has been appointed surgical supervisor at Clinical hospital in Ranger. She entered upon her duties as such Sunday.

Miss Charlie Mason, who formerly held the position, has resigned to take up post-graduate studies in Barnes hospital, St. Louis.

Miss Mason will remain in Fort Worth as acting superintendent of Clinical hospital, until about Nov. 15, when Miss Bowles will return from Dallas and other points to resume her duties at that capacity.

Will Start New Well On Whitson

Corzelius Bros., Taggart & Gordon are preparing to move drilling tools onto the Whitson lease, about three and a half miles north of Ranger, for a deep test. This well will be about three-quarters of a mile from their Dan Waggoner Well, which was recently shot and cleaned and is showing for around seventy-five barrels daily production.

Other activities in that neighborhood are expected soon, it is said. The tools will, in all probability, be on the Whitson by Tuesday, in the event Mr. Gordon arrives from Fort Worth as expected.

ELECTRIC SHOP MOVING TO MAIN STREET LOCATION

The Electric Shop has begun the work of moving from its present location, on North Rusk Street to its new quarters at 305 West Main Street. The removal will take some time, according to John Remote, manager, who plans a formal opening when fully established at the new site.

LIBRARY FUND IS NOW ONLY $227.73 SHORT

Some Committees Have Not Reported; Total is $773.27; Goal Set at $1,000.

Details of the final days of the High school library drive have not been tabulated and subscribers who have recently handed in their subscriptions will be listed, it is said, when committees whose reports are yet out, hand them in, so the total to date can be learned. The total subscriptions to date, nearly all of which have been paid in, it is stated, now amounts to $773.27.

This report covered all subscriptions down to Monday morning. A busy week-end, a High school holiday and various other matters have temporarily halted the workers in the drive, those in charge say. These will be no wet back into harness and hope is expressed that the next few days will bring the grand total up to the ultimate goal of $1,000. It is estimated that committees still out will bring in enough to reduce the deficiency to a sum which it will be easy enough to raise by a short, decisive after-drive. It will take the full $1,000 to start the library off in accordance with state requirements, it is stated by Superintendent Holloway and Mr. Pickett, treasurer of the fund, who express no doubt now of raising the entire amount.

G. W. TURPIN DIES AT HIS HOME NEAR GRAFORD

GRAFORD, Nov. 2.—G. W. Turpin, 66, died here Sunday morning after a short illness.

Turpin was identified with every civic and industrial movement in this section for many years. He has lived on his ranch near Graham since 1918, when he retired from active management of the Turpin-Blair company, which he founded in 1908.

He was born in Florence, Ala., Aug. 21, 1859, and came to Texas in 1880. He first resided at Poolville, Parker county, entering the mercantile and ranching business. He came to Grafard from Poolville.

He is survived by his wife and seven children, Vera of Jacksonville, Hugh of Breckenridge; Glenn of Fort Worth and Bob, Floy, John L., and George Turpin, the latter three of Grafard.

APPELLATE COURT ASKED TO REVIVE INDICTMENTS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The national sensation of the Teapot Dome scandal was revived today when the government went before the District of Columbia court of appeals in an effort to revive indictments on charges of bribery.

The bribery cases will be lost forever if the indictments returned last year against A. B. Fall, former secretary of the interior; Harry Sinclair and the Dohneys, senior and junior, are held to be invalid. To hold them valid the court will have to reverse the ruling of Chief Justice McCooy of the district court, who quashed them, holding them invalid because Oliver Pagen, special assistant in the department of justice, was illegally in the grand jury room at the time they were returned.

STATUTE FIXES BAR TO INFECTED NURSERY STOCK

AUSTIN, Nov. 2.—The Texas commissioner of agriculture is not authorized to establish a quarantine against the shipment of infected nursery stock into this state from any other state, according to a ruling given today by the attorney general. The commissioner was told to follow the line fixed by statute.

Olden Starts Library Drive In Novel Way

A carnival with a home product carnival company to put it on, was staged in Olden last Saturday night as the initial move in a school library drive. It was a unique event, the cash returns from which are said to be all and more than was expected.

The carnival company was made up entirely of teachers and students in the public schools, it is stated. The features included such unusual numbers as riding the whip (provided one could stay on the horse whip while it was drawn across the floor), fortune telling and other real carnival features, including one for men only which no one will reveal. Something more than $60 is reported earned for the library fund by this event.

HILARIOUS ECHOES OF HALLOWEEN

Ranger was singularly free from malicious mischief during Halloween. No tacks were strewn on the streets, a few boxes piled out might have had some nails in them, but not to hurt—not much. The soap marks on windows were easily removed and who wouldn't wash off a soap mark to help a kid have a good time? Even though the kid was high on thirty years young. Even the donkeys stabled in the schoolhouse, didn't kick so why should we?

As to those car turnovers out Thurber way, one of them is said to have lain on the neck of its driver until friendly hands came along and lifted it off. Whereupon the driver remarked, "That was some of the good dance but it was too short!"

Indicating that driver had in all probability been drinking that Thurber lake water which is said to be awfully strong!

All of which innocent pranks and doings showed only temporary insanity or the hilarious spirit which, in Los Angeles, on New Year's night, their night of revel, the city authorities recognize and lay off the downtown section as a restricted territory over which no cars—street cars or autos may intrude and oversee the prankish ones while they have their good times.

But there is a kind of insanity, which is not temporary. It is called the destructive instinct. I once heard a noted alienist lecture and tell his experiences with the insane in the asylum. He said they would take down block houses nicely, but in not one single instance could they be induced to build block houses. The destructive instinct is insanity. There is no other name for it that fits.

Barring innocent mis-understanding the mischief wrought, who can find any other name for tearing up the job wagon of that old negro, Sam Hampton, who with his shoe hoe and auto horn is a familiar figure about town and a hard working old dinky? The bolts lost, the wagon bed boards broken which must be replaced and the like, will mean as much and more to the old negro as buying a new automobile would mean to some banker. It is pleasing to note that the welfare association is taking up the matter and try to repair the damages. But no one can repair the criminal mind of whoever will take advantage of the occasion to play pranks, to do actual harmful mischief. Maybe some shock of realization of the gravity of a thing like that may bring that mind back to normal. But, for the time being, there is nothing else to call it except insanity or worse.

No such excuse can be found for whoever broke down the basket ball posts on one of the high school courts. No normal human did that. Those posts were put there through the Parent-Teachers' Association. They cost money, labor, an outlay of civic effort. Let us hope their destruction was accomplished by some one so young his or her mind hadn't had time to mature.

It has been suggested that teachers in the school should give lessons on the difference between innocent mischief or the exercise of the insane destructive instinct, stressing these things each year just before Halloween. A fine suggestion, but people who do things like that deliberately, with malice a fore thought, are really not subjects for school teachers but for alienists. In all kindness to them, if they have reached a mature age and realize what they are doing, they should be given a home in some asylum with all the comforts the State affords.

But in the main it was a glorious Halloween—full of fun and almost free from real damage.

SIX DEAD AND SCORE INJURED, SEVERAL DYING

Fast Express Crashes Into Auto Fill With School Children At Grade Crossing.

WAYCROSS, Ga., Nov. 2.—Speeding across the Georgia lowlands, the Everglades Limited, crack flyer of the Atlantic coast line, today crashed into a bus load of school children at a grade crossing near here. First reports said six children were killed and 20 injured. The bus had held 32 children.

The accident occurred near the school house to which the children were being carried. Trains of freight cars were standing on both sides of the crossing and it is believed the driver did not see the approaching train. Two physicians were sent from Jacksonville, 70 miles away, to help care for the injured.

It was said at the hospital that the death toll might increase, five children being in a critical condition.

Britain Plans Two Dirigibles Twice Shenandoah's Size For Trade Purposes

By KEITH JONES (United Press Staff Correspondent) LONDON, Nov. 2.—Far from being dismayed by the fate of the Shenandoah and the disasters which Britain is about to start the construction of two dirigibles each more than twice the size of the Shenandoah.

"England has never lost faith in dirigibles" declared a high official of the British Air Ministry in an exclusive interview with the United Press today. "To prove this statement, I will say that designs have been completed and construction is about to be started on two dirigibles each of 5,000,000 cubic feet gas capacity. These are more than twice the size of any dirigible ever heretofore constructed."

These will be known, he said, as the "R-100" and the "R-101." The over-all length of the new machines will be 750 feet and the diameter 130 feet. Less than 100 feet longer than the Shenandoah or the R-33 which has recently made test trips over London, the increased gas capacity of the new air liners will be obtained by a marked increase in their diameter.

"Notwithstanding the increase in the diameter of the new dirigibles," continued the official, "model tests in wind-tunnels have shown that the new design actually presents less resistance to the air than the present dirigibles of half their carrying capacity."

In addition an entirely new type of construction will go into the making of the new airships. Instead of the frame-work of the dirigible being based on aerodynamical principles of construction as previously used on principles followed and developed through long years of steamship construction.

"By keeping the length of the machines approximately the same as in the largest of the present dirigibles and getting the increased capacity by increasing the diameter we are able to construct a machine of much greater strength than has been possible in the past."

BURGLAR INTERRUPTED IN HIS WORK, MAKES KET-AWAY

A burglar attempted to force the lock and gain an entrance to the Ranger city fish market, between 2 and 3 o'clock yesterday morning. They succeeded in breaking the lock and had almost effected an entrance when Emmett Cox, an employee who sleeps over the store, heard them. Not knowing the hour, Cox thought some early customer was trying to get in. He dressed hastily, went out on the porch over the store door, and was about to call down when he saw a man running away.

Firemen's Ball To Be Coming Social Event

Next Friday night, the Ranger firemen will hold their sixth annual ball at some place not yet designated, it is announced. This, as all such similar previous functions, will be given for the benefit of the firemen's uniforms and other things needed for the convenience or comfort of the firemen. It is said.

The new uniforms have already arrived. The ball promises to be one of the most brilliant ever given on any similar occasion, it is said. And the annual firemen's ball, in Ranger, as in all other cities, is always a brilliant affair.

The word, "arrived" is hardly apt as describing the advent of the new uniforms, they being an all-Ranger product, having been made by a local tailoring establishment, it is announced. They will be worn for the first time at the annual ball.

MAY SEYMOUR FOOT LOOSE

by BEATRICE BURTON ONEA

THE STORY SO FAR:

May Seymour, whose husband killed himself because of her love affair with Jim Carraway, returns to her home town after a year's absence. She asks her lawyer, Dick Gregory, to sell her stocks and bonds, and turns over the sale of her house to Ulysses Forgan, a widower, who is in the real estate business.

Then, with her small fortune in cash, she sets out to find and marry a man with money. At Atlantic City she meets a divorcee, Carlotta Frolking, and her friends, Herbert Waterbury and Dan Sprague. Both men pay suit to May, to the distress of Carlotta, who has been in love with Dan for many years.

But May decides that Waterbury is the millionaire husband she is looking for, and sets her cap for him. Finally he proposes, and May turns over to him every dollar of her little fortune. But she regrets it almost at once, when Carlotta, leaving for her home in California, warns May not to trust Waterbury too far.

When May, in a panic, demands that Waterbury give her back her money, he disappears.

Penniless, May sells her jewelry and her coat to raise enough money to buy a railroad ticket to California, where she plans to visit Carlotta, who has asked her to spend the winter with her.

On the way she stops off to see her friend, Gloria Gregory, wife of May's lawyer. She shrinks from meeting her old friends who gossiped about her at the time of Dr. John's suicide. But Gloria persuades her to face them bravely; and one day while she and May were lunching downtown Ulysses Forgan and his young daughter, Sally, come to the table. Ulysses asks May to help him chaperone a party that Sally is giving that afternoon in his home.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY:

Ulysses Forgan's home was far out on a country road, hidden from the highway by a tall hedge. As he and May drove up to it late that afternoon, a sound of music came faintly to their ears—the haunting wail of jazz played on a phonograph.

"The kids beat us to it. They're here already," Ulysses remarked as he drew the car up before the broad steps. "By jove, you'd think they'd get tired of dancing sometimes. But they never do!"

The afternoon was rainy, and although it was only 5 o'clock, the moth-gray twilight was settling down like a fog. From the windows of the south wing lights gleamed.

"What a wonderful place you have here!" May cried, as she stepped out upon the smooth lawn and looked around her.

At one side of the house was a sunken garden. On the other was a tennis court, and beyond that a square swimming pool.

"I like it," Ulysses said modestly. "I've lived here all my life, you see. This was my grandfather's farm. Of course, I've fixed it up a bit."

He offered May his arm with an old-fashioned courtesy that she liked, and they went up the steps together. In the white-paneled hall a wood fire burned brightly, and a bowl of late roses shed their sweetness on the warm, fresh air. Through wide doorways May could see other rooms—a fire-lit library, and a dining room agleam with silver and old mahogany.

"This is the 'homeiest' house I've ever seen," May said, slipping out of her coat. "It makes me feel happy just to be here—and I'm not just saying it to be polite. I mean it. I love your home."

Ulysses shook his head. "It takes a woman to make a house a 'home,'" he replied. "A house needs a mistress."

"But there's Sally—" May began.

Ulysses smiled grimly. "This isn't 'home' for Sally. It's just the place where she parks her lipstick and gets her telephone calls," he said. "She doesn't sleep here half the time. Usually she spends the night with some girl friend or other. She says we live too far out from town. Keeps teasing me to sell the place."

He stopped talking, and looked at May quizzically.

"You don't want to go in there, do you?" He jerked his thumb in the direction of the sunroom beyond the library. Through the glass doors that led to it May could see the flash of dancing figures. "They're making a terrific racket. Suppose we sit here by the fire and talk?"

He drew two arm chairs up before the fire, and May sank into one of them. Ulysses lit a cigar, and stood, puffing at it and looking down at her.

"What am I going to do with my girl, Mrs. Seymour?" he asked presently. "Here she is at 18, wild as a baby tiger. Doesn't know how to do anything but dance like a chorus girl, paint herself up like one, and smoke cigaret after cigaret all day long."

May looked thoughtfully at the fire.

"The smoking's bad for her health, of course," she agreed. "And the paint will spoil her skin. But—I believe in dancing. It's healthful exercise for young, healthy bodies."

She laughed, and her eyes shone.

"You see, I dance myself," she explained. "So I defend dancing. To be honest, I smoke cigarets, sometimes, too. Rotten habit, but still I do it. And—I have been known to paint my lips!"

He said nothing, and she went on:

"But all the same, if I had a daughter of my own, I'd see to it that she neither smoked, drank, nor painted her face. Besides that, I wouldn't let her spend the night away from home two or three times a week. Mr. Forgan! I'm afraid that if I were a mother I'd be a very strict and horrid one."

Ulysses sat down in the chair beside hers.

"I think you'd be a very lovely mother," he said in a low tone, "and I wonder if you'd mind talking to Sally about smoking? She won't listen to me; I'm only her father."

He laughed. But there was no answering smile on May's face. She stared at him, with wide, solemn eyes. Could it be possible that he had never heard of any of the gossip about her? If he had, he wouldn't want her to "mother" Sally, would he?

"Mr. Forgan," she began, turning her eyes away from him, and looking down into the glowing fire, "you never heard the story of my husband's death, did you?"

"I knew he shot himself," Ulysses answered. "Read about it in the paper."

May cleared her throat.

"Do you know why he shot himself?" she asked, and her voice was not much more than a hoarse whisper. "It was very hard to sit here in this peaceful house, and go over the story of Dr. John's suicide."

"Well—I heard some talk about you and this little man, Carewe," Ulysses said. "Let's see, you were supposed to be in love with him, weren't you?"

May nodded, wordless. Her silence seemed to spread through the room, to throb like a beating heart.

"Were you in love with him?" Ulysses asked.

May closed her eyes and shook her head. Then she felt Ulysses' warm hand close firmly down over hers.

She drew it away carelessly. She hadn't quite made up her mind whether she wanted Ulysses Forgan to fall in love with her or not. She'd have to think it over.

And in the meantime, the clever thing was to keep him at arm's length. The less of herself a woman gave to a man, the more of her he wanted. The trouble with women was that when they loved a man, they wanted to give him everything—their love, their thoughts. No wonder men tired of women so soon.

May stood up and shook herself.

"Let's go in and see what the children are doing," she said briskly, and led the way through the darkness of the library to the big sunroom beyond.

There were eight of the "children"—the boys ranging in age from 20 to 25, the girls rather younger. They had stopped dancing, and were gathered around two tea-wagons loaded with sandwiches, cakes and tall glasses of ginger ale.

Ulysses picked up one of the glasses and sniffed it.

"There's whisky in that glass," he said severely. "Which one of you brought it?"

The four young men looked sheepish, but none of them spoke.

"Oh, dad!" wailed Sally. "You always crab my parties. I never can have a good time at home like the other girls."

"Who brought the whisky?" thundered Ulysses again. "I've told you, Sally, I won't have liquor in this house! Now, you tell me who brought it!"

But Sally had closed her lips firmly, and she refused to open them again.

Suddenly a small gipsy of a girl who stood beside her began to laugh. "I cannot tell a lie. I brought it in my little flask, Mr. Forgan," she said sweetly, looking up at him with eyes like blue-black water and smiling with parted lips. "Don't be cross with me, please. And please don't tell my father. He'd throw a fit if he knew I stole his liquor, wouldn't he, Sally?"

Sally, appealed to, nodded solemnly. "He certainly would, Betty," she said. "And anyway, we didn't have very much. The flask only holds a pint. Oh, dad, what are you doing?"

What Ulysses was doing was plain to be seen. He had collected all the glasses and was emptying them, one by one, into a silver pitcher.

"Here, Fred, take this into the kitchen and empty it into the sink," he said, handing it to the tallest of the boys. "And I mean to empty it in the sink—not pour it down your throat! Get me?"

"Yessir," the youth named Fred answered, and disappeared with the pitcher.

"There!" Sally threw out her hands to May in helpless appeal. "Didn't I tell you dad crabs every party I ever have! He's just ruining my life!" She burst into a storm of tears, and in five minutes the party was at an end, the guests departing sadly like mourners at a funeral.

"I swear I don't know what to do with the child!" the "child's" father confessed to May, as they drove back to town through the dripping darkness. "I've given Sally everything that money can buy, and still she's not happy. She's the most discontented creature in the world."

"You've given her too much—that's the trouble," May answered softly. "She's bored with everything—even with parties unless they're drinking parties. Why don't you let her get a job? Let her train for a nurse, or something like that—something really useful?"

"Would you go to work if you had no money?" Ulysses answered her question with one of his own: "Do you crave a job?"

May chuckled.

"I'd either do that, or go to the poor house," she said lightly, "unless I lived on my friends' bounty. As a matter of fact, that's exactly what I'm doing now."

In the darkness she could feel his eyes pass over her face with a swift, puzzled look.

"But you have the money from the sale of your house," he said.

May shook her head.

"I haven't a penny of it," she answered. "I gave it to a man to invest for me. And, to put it elegantly, he 'skipped out' with it! I'm stony broke."

Without warning she began to cry, not noisily as Sally had cried, but so quietly that Ulysses could hardly hear her. He seemed to sense her tears, and put one arm around her to draw her to him. And May found herself sobbing her grief out on the shoulder of his rough overcoat—telling him all about the wily Waterbury.

"I—I wanted to write and tell you about him," she heard herself saying. "But I—I was afraid I didn't know you well enough."

There was a long silence, as Ulysses guided the car over a rough detour. Presently he spoke.

"You know me better, now, don't you?" he asked. "And the thing I'd like best in the world would be to have a letter from you now and then."

He said it in a cold, flat voice; and so May didn't realize that in his own queer way he was trying to tell her that he cared for her. She drew away from him and wiped her eyes. Love-making had never been Ulysses Forgan's specialty.

FARMERS AND SHIPPERS OPPOSE HIGHER RATES

CHICAGO, Oct. 31.—The Chicago hearing of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a 5 per cent increase in freight rates ended this afternoon with an attack on the proposals by farmers and shippers, whose representatives declared there was no justification for an increase at this time.

JOHN DOE INDICTMENTS RETURNED AGAINST BANDITS

BUFFALO, Oct. 31.—The hunt for the six bandits who robbed the Bank of Buffalo and killed two men, dangerously wounding a third, made little progress today. John Doe indictments charging robbery and first degree murder were returned by the grand jury late yesterday against the six bandits.

NUDE DANCERS STRIKE FOR DRESS WAGE SCALE

BERLIN, Nov. 2.—A strike among Berlin's nude dancers ended dramatically when the police raised a number of illicit cabarets where the dancers had been employed.

The dancers had demanded a graduated pay scale based on the amount of clothing they wore. The less the clothes, the higher the pay.

While the matter was being arbitrated by the dancers and the proprietors of the cabarets, the police raided the meeting and put both dancers and proprietors under arrest.
