Phone Booths Contains Ads For Hard Liquor

By United Press.
LONDON.—Advertisements for "hard liquors" can now be displayed in public telephone booths and most offices in England.
 Sir William Mitchell-Thompson, Postmaster General, has lifted the ban on advertisements and public posters of liquor manufacturers in these places.
 Protests against the ban on all liquor advertisements, in force about three years ago, led to the acceptance of wine ads. This brought a storm of questions from prohibitionists in the House of Commons, but the Post Office Department continued to permit "light liquor" ads and posters. Under the present ruling, all types of liquor advertisements may be displayed.

 There are 584 men at the institution but very few have been placed in the stripe class.

Legionnaires Win First Half From The Salesmen

The American Legion team won the first half race in the Business Men's League Sunday afternoon in the play off game by signally defeating the Salesmen in Nitro Park, score 18 to 10. The game was replete with hard hitting and snappy fielding with the legionnaires showing up best in both branches of the game. Errors were even with both teams making four each.

In the hitting branch, Collum for the Salesmen and Brasher for the Legion were the stars. Collum got a home run, a double and two singles in four times up, while Brasher hit a triple, a double and two singles in four times up. Littlefield of the Salesmen played stellar ball, he scored four of the Salesmen's runs, and hit safely three times in his four trips to the plate.

Gallagher of the legionnaires developed into a first class base thief, and stole third while the ball was being returned to the pitcher. The game was tight until a fast double play took all the fight out of the Salesmen. Lingle hit one to J. B. Peacock who threw home to catch Collum, and then Rinshaw doubled Lingle off of first.

Chinese Bandits Wreck and Rob River Steamer

HARBIN.—The Sungari river steamer Tovan, which left Harbin for Fugdien, was wrecked and robbed by Chinese brigands in the vicinity of Taolami. The brigands who were informed beforehand of the steamer's arrival, carried huge rocks from some hills situated several miles from the river and sank these rocks in the fairway.
 The steamer which was carrying about 200 passengers and had a barge in tow, hit the submerged rocks and foundered in a shallow place. The brigands fired a few salvos after which the soldier guard on board quickly surrendered. The passengers were relieved of all their valuables and the steamer thoroughly looted, the brigands securing loot worth thousands of dollars.

VANITY CASE

By Carolyn Wells
© 1926 by G.P. PUTNAM'S SONS

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Mrs. Prentiss sees lights mysteriously appear and disappear next door in the Heath household one night, and the next morning, Harbor Gardens, Long Island, is agog with the murder of Myra Heath and the disappearance of her husband, Perry.

House guests of the Heaths are Lawrence Inman and Bunny Moore. Inman might have a motive because he is heir to Myra's considerable fortune, she having cut Perry off. Suspicion also points to golden-haired, vivacious Bunny, because of her refusal to answer questions at the inquest.

Myra Heath was peculiar. She never used cosmetics, never wore colors. She had a mania for collecting glass, and it was a rare old whiskey bottle from her collection that the murderer used to kill her. Candles were burning at her head and feet, and nearby was a card marked, "The Worth of Perry Heath." Strange of all, she was heavily made up and dressed with gay colors.

The peculiar thing about Heath's disappearance is the fact that all windows and doors had been locked on the inside the night before and were found that way by the butler in the morning. Finger prints of Bunny Moore and Inman were found on the bottle and physicians established that the rouge was applied to Myra Heath after death.

At the Country Club, the murder is discussed by Sam Anderson, Heath's rival for the club presidency; Al Cunningham, who is trying to solve the crime, and others. Some believe Heath the murderer. Others, including Anderson, disagree. Cunningham learns from Mrs. Prentiss of the mysterious lights. Todhunter Buck, her nephew, and Cunningham inspect the Heath home and Cunningham confiscates Bunny's vanity case.

Buck has fallen in love with Bunny and believes her innocent. He goes to the funeral parlors and finds Cunningham and Detective Mott.

CHAPTER XXI

The two greeted him with grave and serious faces.

On a table between them lay an ornate and elaborate vanity case which Buck instantly believed to be Bunny's missing property.

It was of gold, and to the main box were attached various and sundry dangling little boxes or phials, all hung by gold chains.

"Here you are, Mr. Buck," and Cunningham plunged at once into the matter. "This is Miss Moore's vanity box. I took it from her bedroom. Now experts have made tests and they say that the cosmetics applied to Mrs. Heath's face after she was dead, might have been from this box—"

"Might have been!" said Buck, quietly. "What does that prove?"

"Only that they were not from the boxes belonging to Mrs. Heath herself. That, so far as we know, there was no other available vanity box in the Heath house last night. An examination of the servants' belongings shows only some inferior materials. That this box shows on its surface the finger prints of Miss Moore, only—no others. And so, we are forced to the conclusion, that, quite apart from the murder, the making up of Mrs. Heath's face was done by Miss Moore. This in itself is, of course, no crime, but added to the fact that Miss Moore's finger prints were on the bottle that was used as a weapon, we can't help feeling that Miss Moore was in some way implicated in the matter, if only as an accessory or an observer."

"You think so?" was Toddy's non-committal reply.

"We do," was the response from Detective Mott, himself. "And if you are reinterested in a proof of it, stay here a few moments longer. I have sent for an important witness, and if you choose, you can listen in." So Toddy stayed, and it was not long before Emma, the waitress from the Heath home, appeared.

She was the one who had seemed simple and honest at the time of the inquest and Mott greeted her kindly.

"Well, Emma," he said, "we've sent for you, because we think you know more than you told at the inquest."

"Yes, sir," said the phlegmatic and imperturbable young woman.

Mott didn't quite know whether her response was one of acquiescence or merely acknowledgment of his remark, but he felt his way slowly.

"You do know a little more, Emma?" he said, ingratiatingly.

"Yes, sir," was the stolid assent.

"Well, tell it." Mott was getting impatient.

"Tell what, sir?"

"What you know."

But suddenly, Emma seemed to get scared.

"I don't know anything, sir?" she half-breathed, her eyes getting big with fright and her voice trembling.

Mott pursued his advantage.

"Yes, you do! Now, out with it! Do you want to find yourself in the station house? Tell me what you saw, when you came downstairs to let Katie in!"

"I told the gentleman, sir, that I saw nothing."

"I know you did. And you told a lie! Now, do the best you can to repair the slip of your tongue. What did you see? Or whom?"

"I—I saw—" Emma hesitated, but her interlocutor gave her a prod.

"Out with it now! It will be far better for you in the long run, if you tell the truth. You saw somebody—who was it?"

"Miss—Miss Bunny, sir."

"This was mendacity on Mott's part, but he knew how to treat a girl like Emma.

"What was she doing?" he went on.

"She—she was going upstairs, sir."

"Going upstairs, was she? Alone?"

"Quite alone, sir."

"Did she—listen, now Emma—did she have this vanity box in her hand?"

"Yes, yes, sir," Emma faltered.

"Are you sure?" Toddy Buck broke in. "I believe this girl will assent to anything you suggest!"

"Are you sure, Emma?" Mott repeated.

"Yes, sir, I'm sure," Emma said, "because I heard it jingle as it hit against the 'stir rail. Oh, sir, I hope I haven't done wrong to tell!"

"No. You do wrong when you don't tell. Do you know any more? What did the young lady do next?"

"That's all, sir. She went up the stairs and into her own room and shut the door."

"And this was at one o'clock?"

"Your a good witness, Emma. Half-past one was what you said at the inquest."

"But it was half-past one, sir. I saw by the pantry clock."

"Yes," interrupted Al Cunningham, "and you said at the inquest that you saw no one when you came down to let Katie in. You said that the servants' rooms are all in the back of the house—"

"Yes, sir—" Emma looked distressed. "But I peeped in the front part, through the door upstairs, and I saw Miss Moore. And I didn't say anything about it at first—but now, I thought I'd better."

"Oh, you did!" said Cunningham. "And whose advice made you feel that way about it?"

"Carter's sir."

Truly, Emma was ingenious!

"Ah, Carter's. And why does she want Miss Moore brought into this thing?"

"I don't know, sir. She just advised me to tell all I know."

"And have you done so?"

"Yes, sir, I have, but Katie—she hasn't."

"Hello," Mott took up the querying. "Katie hasn't, eh? Well, do you know what it is that Katie hasn't told? Can you tell us as well as Katie could?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then go ahead."

"Why, you see, Katie is engaged to her young man, Jimmy Lomax. Well, when they two comes home, from Katie's evening out, they don't always come right in the house."

"No? What do they do?"

"Well, they—they sets in the arbor and—and spoons—like."

"Oh, I see. And you wait till they're through spooning, and then you let Katie in? You're a loyal friend, Emma."

"Yes, sir."

"Well, go on."

"Well, you see, sir, that night—last night as ever was, sir, when Katie and Jim were settin' quiet like in the arbor, he saw a man come out of the house, leas'twise he come off of the verandah, and he went away."

"Went away?"

"Yes, sir, went down the road and out of the gate."

"Oh, he did. And who was this man?"

"Jim, he don't know, sir. You see, he was talkin' to Katie, and he just sorta noticed the man, unthinkin' like. He says it mighta been Mr. Heath, and then again, it mightn't."

"I see. Well, that matter will bear looking into. Now, as to Miss Moore. You're sure you saw her coming upstairs, at one-thirty with this vanity case in her hand?"

"Yes, sir, I'm sure."

Emma's stolid demeanor went for to convince her hearer of her sincerity of statement, whatever the deductions might indicate.

After a few more questions, which brought out nothing new, Mott sent the girl away, with strict instructions to tell no word of what had passed at the interview. And so thoroughly did he threaten her with punishment, for disobedience, that Emma went off, vowing inviolable secrecy.

"THE BLIND GODDESS" TO HAVE PREMIERE AT LAMB

A girl demanding the life of her own mother!

This is one of the powerful situations in "The Blind Goddess," Paramount's vital picturization of Arthur Train's mighty novel, which makes its local debut at the Lamb Theater Monday and Tuesday.

Victor Fleming, noted screen director, is said to have turned this intensely dramatic story into a gripping picture, rich in romance, pathos, suspense and emotion.

The action involves four principal characters; a young prosecuting attorney, played by Jack Holt; a New York politician, portrayed by Ernest Torrence; his daughter and Holt's fiancée, charmingly personified by Esther Ralston; and the mystery-woman, impersonated by Louise Dresser.

Miss Dresser is accused of murdering Torrence. Events leading up to and following the crime indicate that she is the guilty one. The gun found alongside the dead man's body is proved to be hers. She was last seen with Torrence. Her latch-key was discovered in the room where the murder had been committed. She was fleeing from the city at the time of her arrest. This and other circumstantial bits of evidence are used to build up the case against her.

Holt is told to prosecute and Miss Ralston demands that he ask for the extreme penalty. Unknown to the girl, the accused woman is her own mother, who had deserted her husband many years before. What happens when Holt resigns his position and gives up the girl he loves to protect the mother, goes to make up a picture of tremendous appeal.

COLLEEN'S LATEST

"Ella Cinders" is Colleen Moore's newest starring vehicle, made by John McCormick and released by First National. Keen interest is aroused in the announcement, as Miss Moore's following, locally as everywhere, is one that always spells capacity at whatever theatre her pictures are shown. At the Liberty today and Tuesday.
