I had a December treat -- got Rob married off!

So you wondered why the Tribune was closed Dec. 14 and 15?

The answer is easy -- I attended son Rob's wedding in a place called Harlingen, Texas.

All I know is that it's far, far away.

Now the wedding went real well with about 350 folks partying.

The hard part was getting there. After I arrived in Houston, I found the connecting flight to Harlingen was cancelled, due to fog.

They had more flights there scheduled but I was afraid to wait, and miss the rehearsal dinner (especially since I had to pay for it!).

So I rented a car and drove the 6 1/2 hours -- getting to the dinner only half an hour late. That worked out great.

You say you don't know where Harlingen is? Well, that makes two of us...

No, just joking. It's way south, way, way south. The city of 50,000 is known for two things:

-- A half hour drive from South Padre Island, where college kids like to enjoy spring break each year.

-- The famous Iwo Jima statue, based on raising the U.S. flag during the World War II vicious battle.

I had always thought that the Iwo Jima statue in Washington, D.C., was the real thing. It's just a copy.

The original is in Harlingen, since that is where the sculptor was from.

If you are ever down that way, I strongly urge you to visit it. The statue is simply magnificent. More than magnificent.

We also visited the adjacent museum and watched a movie on the battle, then the elderly gent working there told of his experiences, since he was a survivor of that fight.

Border Banter

By Mike Pomper

Also at the wedding, I got to chat with Matt Foster, who was Rob's Best Man.

Matt was state high jump champion while attending Farwell High.

He lives in Sulphur Springs, Texas, now and is having a successful career in construction. He and his lady came to Harlingen for the wedding. I expect them to "get hitched" later this year, too.

I got a fun joke from a Texico teacher, that I want to pass on. Here's how it goes:

Subject: School Answering Machine.

You have reached the answering service of your school. In order to assist you in connecting to the right staff member, please listen to all options before making a selection.

To lie about why your child is absent, Press 1.

To make excuses for why your child did not do his work, Press 2.

To complain about what we do, Press 3.

To curse staff members, Press 4.

To ask why you didn't get needed information that was already included in your handbook, monthly calendar, newspaper and several notices sent to you, Press 5.

If you want us to raise your child, Press 6.

If you want to reach out and touch, slap or hit someone, Press 7.

To request another teacher for the third time this year, Press 8.

To complain about bus transportation, Press 9.

To complain about school lunches, Press 0.

If you realize that this is the real world and your child must be accountable -- responsible for his/her behavior, classwork, homework, and that it is not the school's fault for your child's lack of effort...

Hang up and HAVE A NICE DAY!!!!

Speaking of answering machines, I had a friend give me an 800 number to call a discount sales company that included 7 options. No. 7 was the key one.

After the first 6 options, the usuals, you heard this:

"If you want to hear a duck quack, please use No. 7".

Yep...that's what you heard...

Quack, quack, quack.

Here's a cute story to show how well I have been accepted into the Lazbuddie community.

I was out at Roy Don and April Coker's place on Saturday to take a picture of Roy Don (and partner Mike Blackburn) for a national farming newsletter.

While waiting for the guys, the Cokers' dog was barking at me like mad.

Then the dog went over to my pickup and "marked" it as his territory.

After that, the dog was quite friendly....

There was an Associated Press story in the Lubbock paper that really caught my eye. Because it says a whole lot about collegiate athletes.

As most folks know, Miami, Florida and Florida State are football powerhouses. The reason is simple -- they are known as "party schools" where academics don't rate very highly for some.

Anyway, Florida State's All American receiver is ineligible for the big bowl game because, the AP story said, "for failing three of four classes this semester."

Yes, that is sad in itself. But read on....

The story says that Florida

State requires its athletes to meet higher standards than the NCAA national eligibility requirements.

What does that mean? You are only ineligible, under NCAA rules, if you flunk all four classes???????????

Letter To The Editor

Dear Mike, I couldn't help but respond to Ruth Moore's letter concerning Coach King and the Lady Wolverines.

It is Coach King's job to prepare his teams to play at the highest level possible. Unfortunately for other schools Coach King has an excellent team and one that is very deep in talent. You can't tell kids not to play hard and with intensity.

I know that the Texico Lady Wolverines have spent a great deal of time in the gym trying to get better. Coach King has developed a basketball program at Texico that didn't happen by accident or without a lot of hard work.

I agree with Mrs. Moore that teachers and coaches should be role models. They should be well prepared and their students should be able to demonstrate what they have learned.

The Texico Lady Wolverines could not be a better example of a teaching job well done. I would tell my sons that Coach King is a success because of his hard work and dedication and they should learn from teachers like him.

A Will Anderson adventure

The culture of kidnapping

by Will Anderson

(Editor's note: U.S. Naval Commander Will Anderson, son of Bob and Carrie Anderson of Farwell, periodically sends the Tribune stories and photos from his various ports of call. Currently, he is serving as an attache with the U.S. Embassy in Quito, Ecuador.)

All the people here in Quito who played extras in the film, "Proof of Life," are eager to see how the film came out now that it has been released to the theaters in the United States. However, for most of us in the U.S. Embassy, it will also be a disturbing experience to see the film, because it looks like it is going to reflect a very sad part of the life in this part of South America so accurately. That sad side of life here is called the culture of kidnapping.

The title of the movie is based on the fact that in these outages, kidnapers routinely provide "proof of life" of their victims in their attempt to extort money, power, or publicity. One of the most common ways to do this is to mail a photograph of the victims holding today's newspaper in front of them.

Kidnapping is endemic in these countries. Men, women, and children are taken at gunpoint, stolen from their families and their work, so terrorists can make a political statement, so criminals can demand a massive payment of money to return their victims safely, or so somebody can get revenge for some real or imagined wrong by a neighbor.

Even in the smallest villages in the remote parts of Ecuador, Colombia, Peru, Bolivia, and Paraguay, kidnapping is used as a form of revenge. If one farmer is offended by his neighbor, he can respond with violence because there is little or no police or judicial presence, and deaths due to vigilante justice and bloody feuds are common.

Murder is always an option, but other than the sick satisfaction of "getting even," it rarely produces a material profit. Kidnapping an enemy's relative, on the other hand, is an evil act that can deliver revenge at the same time that it can put money into the pocket.

Colombia now has the dreadful title as being the kidnap capital of the world, with some negotiations for the release of victims continuing for up to three years, although most kidnapers prefer much less time than that. The plague of kidnapping is a growth industry in Ecuador as well, getting worse every month.

(It has gotten to a point in Ecuador that in November, when the fishermen of the Galapagos Islands were protesting a government regulation that limited the size of their annual catch, Ecuador's Ministry of Environment was forced to repeal the law because the fishermen were kidnapping...turtles. The fishermen broke into the "Charles Darwin Research Center" on Santa Cruz and escaped with ten huge land tortoises, some of the last living members of their sub-species. Faced with the extinction of this sub-species, the Ministry of the Environment was left with little choice.)

Kidnapping of American citizens is nothing new, it has been a problem in foreign countries all over the world for years, particularly for the purpose of making political statements if you will remember the years that Americans were held in Beirut. And although I doubt that it made television news in the States, the Embassy team was embroiled in a crisis last year in which Canadian and American oil workers were kidnapped.

These rigs, belonging to a Canadian company called City Investing, were isolated in the rainforests of Sucumbios Province and the workers were basically sitting ducks when they were taken at gunpoint as they drove to the sites. The Department of State and the FBI immediately flew in hostage negotiators and other support personnel to work with the Embassy team in the attempt to get these people released, standard procedure.

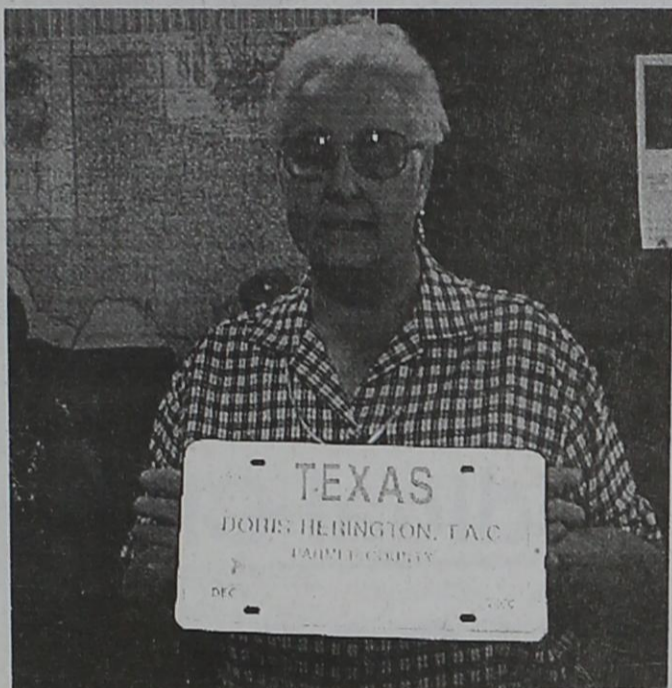

Going back 200 years, to the wars against the Barbary pirates who were demanding payments for the return of American citizens abducted from ships in the Mediterranean Sea, the U.S. government has refused to pay ransoms, with the curt statement, "millions for defense, but not a penny for tribute." That still holds true, but private companies make their own decisions in this matter.

In this case, after 99 days of phone calls, and radio conversations, the kidnapers finally communicated a sum of money that City Investing was willing to pay to get its people back. After a complicated process to ensure anonymity, the exchange was made, the kidnapers disappeared with the money, and the oil workers were flown back to their homes. Companies that pay ransoms, however, do so at the risk of making their own employees prime targets in the future. That appears to be what has happened here now, with oil companies being seen as a ready source of easy money.

In October of this year, in a well-organized operation, kidnapers struck at several oil rigs at once, taking the employees of an Argentinean company named Repsol. The oil workers, five from the U.S. and one from Argentina, Uruguay, and New Zealand, were herded into a Repsol helicopter near the village of Shushufindi, and the company's pilots were forced to fly to a clearing close to the Colombian border. The French pilots managed to walk to civilization for help in a day, and the helicopter was located in the clearing by an Ecuadorian Army patrol shortly thereafter, but the kidnapers and their victims have disappeared into the dense rainforests.

Repsol is a private company, as said before, and the negotiations between the kidnapers and the Repsol TPI (Third Part Intermediary) have been ongoing ever since then. The embassies of the U.S., Argentina, Uruguay and Great Britain (representing New Zealand, which doesn't have an embassy in Quito) are cooperating every way possible with the government of Ecuador and with each other to get these oil workers released. Embassy officers keep the victims' families updated by phone, calls are made to Washington hourly, and day by day this ugly process plays out.

And it is an ugly process, bartering back and forth for human beings, listening to the voice of the kidnapers on the radio demanding a huge sum of money for the safe return of the "merchandise" (as they call their victims). And so the process continues, with Ecuadorian soldiers making cautious patrols of the rainforests, the TPI making proposals and counter-proposals in the periodic communications, the churches around Ecuador praying for these men and their families, and the four involved embassies in Quito waiting for whatever "proof of life" the kidnapers are going to send to us next.

Doris Herington honored

Blizzard hits

As this newspaper is being put together on Tuesday, at least 3 to 4 inches of snow have fallen in the Twin Cities.

Some electrical outages were caused.

Roads to Clovis have been closed, with more snow expected throughout the day and night as a winter blizzard has struck Eastern New Mexico and West Texas.

If the Tribune is delivered late this week, please chalk it up to the snowstorm. We print our paper in Hereford and the roads may be a problem this week.

If planting was delayed...

This year's weather delayed cotton harvest on the South Plains also delayed many producers' plans to seed small grains for grain, forage or hay. They may be wondering whether it is too late to seed a small grain crop, said a Texas A&M agronomist.

"Small grains such as oats and barley require a minimum average daily soil temperature of 45 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit for good germination and adequate stand establishment," said Calvin Trostle, Texas Agricultural Extension Service agronomist at Texas A&M's Research and Extension Center here. "But our soil temperatures on the South Plains have been cooler than normal since about Nov. 20.

"In fact, the average daily soil temperatures at a depth of four inches has been at or below 45 degrees.

Wheat is more cold tolerant than oats or barley, and can produce an adequate stand if it is seeded when soil temperatures are as low as 40 degrees. Even so, late planted wheat has less time to meet its vernalization (cold) requirement and establish a good root system, the agronomist said.

"Wheat yield potential declines steadily with later plantings. You can achieve fair yields from wheat seeded as late as mid-December with favorable soil temperatures, but it has far less potential to dollar-out and produce good net economic returns," Trostle said. "Rye is more cold tolerant than wheat. The soil temperature planting guides that apply to wheat also work well for rye.

Oats achieve adequate germination and stands when the soil temperature is 50 degrees. Lower soil temperatures hinder germination, leaving some of the seed dormant in seeded ground until the soil warms up.

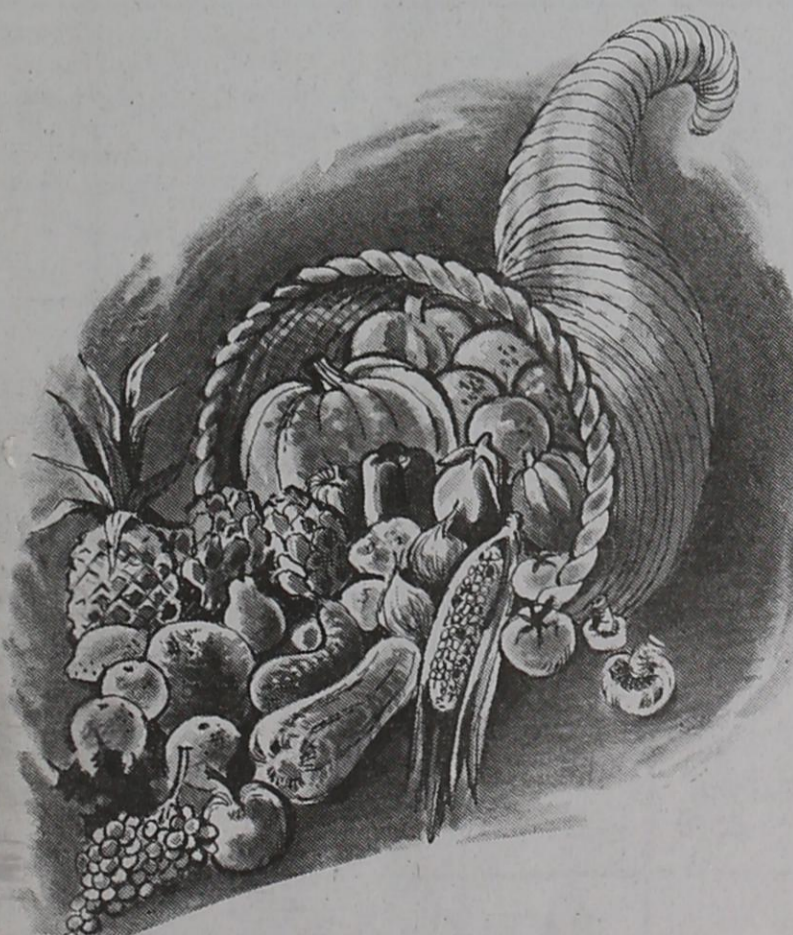

"It's unlikely that our soil temperatures will warm back up to 50 degrees in December, so we are well past the optimum planting window for oats," Trostle said. "Oats seeded in cool soils are also susceptible to rot, if soil moisture is ample. Even if it does germinate, cold temperatures will likely retard its growth.

"Growers who seed wheat, oats or other small grains in cold, wet soils should consider using a seed-applied systemic treatment such as Apron or Metalaxyl to reduce the odds of seedling disease."

Now the 'Overpass' ball is in New Mexico's court

A meeting was held in Texico on Dec. 20 involving the mayors and city councils of both communities and the district engineers for the Texas and New Mexico highway departments.

The topic was simple: The Overpass.

Steve Perez, Texas district highway engineer stationed in Littlefield, Texas, said there was no negativism voiced by anyone at the meeting.

Perez reported that Texas has approved funds for the design and planning. Now the ball is in New Mexico's court. Ralph Meeks, New Mexico district highway engineer stationed in Roswell, will start looking to see if that state is will to fund its portion.

"The New Mexico folks sounded positive, and will try to get the funds needed," said Perez. "They will work on this the next two to three months. If they can't find funds, there is nothing we can do. It has to be a joint project."

The overpass has been the long discussed bridge over the Santa Fe Railroad tracks between Texico and Farwell. Currently, the waits due to train traffic are often lengthy. And with another track due to be laid, those waits could cause serious traffic disruption between the two states.

Perez estimated the total cost for the project to be between $10 million and $15 million, from start to finish. Since a majority of the work would be in New Mexico, that means the bulk of the funds would have to come from that state.

Perez listed four alternatives:

1. Build bridges over the railroad tracks from the existing Lubbock and Amarillo highways into Texico.
2. Build a bridge south of Texico-Farwell, thus bypassing the community.
3. Build a bridge north of Texico-Farwell, thus bypassing the community.
4. Don't build a bridge; just leave the status quo.

"To me, the best way to go is to use Alternative No. 1 -- going over Highway 84, and tying in with the highway from Amarillo," said Perez.

Asked about the news the previous week that the Rip's Western Wear building may be placed on the New Mexico historical registry and whether this would affect the proposed bridges, Perez said "it's probably not a problem."

Announcement of the Overpass project was made last summer after funds for it were okayed. But it was just this month that the project was put on a fast track. Thus, if both states okay funds, the project could be completed in 5 years instead of the 10 to 15 years anticipated earlier.
