energy can be saved. Mrs. Wilda Echols, Area Extension Energy Specialist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, will then cover ways to stop these energy wastes, including insulation, landscaping, etc. She will also discuss the application of solar energy to the home and how a change in lifestyle can save energy.

Tax Statements

By Charles Buzzard

Every person paying only his fair share is the intent of tax laws. All property should be taxed in direct proportion to it's value and all property in a taxing district should be taxed at the same proportion to value.

A tax equalization program is a mass re-evaluation of each piece of land, every building and home, and all businesses within the taxing jurisdictions. This program places a uniform, equitable, yet factual value on all taxable properties. large scale reappraisal is a complex task, especially if the program is to be completed rapidly an accurately.

The property tax can be the fairest tax of all when administered correctly, or the least fair when administered with fear, favor, or prejudice.

From now until April of next year, the Wheeler County Appraisal District will be con- many wonderful friends they ducting a mass reappraisal program. This office plans to one. keep the taxpayer informed at all times in the progress of this you. program. If there are any civic clubs or any other organization interested in our program, we would be glad to give our presentation. If anyone has questions, feel free to call or come by. We are located in the Old Jail building located on the Courthouse Square, Wheeler, Texas. The phone number is 826-5900.

Every citizen is affected by a tax reappraisal and has the right to be informed about any changes in the taxing program. It is the intention of this office to keep the taxpayers informed. Supplying citizens with facts makes them less likely to misunderstand or resent the reappraisal effort.

Games We Played

By Reda Mae Turner

The small country schools are a thing of the past, and the games we played at recess are all but forgotten.

Monday mornings were always so special. We always spent the first hour singing Hymns and quoting verses from the Bible. I think we all enjoyed this hour, most of the entire week.

All the pupils from the primer through the eighth or nineth grade numbered no more than twenty or thirty. We all played together, and learned honesty and fairness in our games of long ago just as students do today in ballgames. The older children watched out for the little beginners. The small fry took their attitudes from the older childen.

One game I remember was called, Needles Eye. We sang a little song as we played this game, usually two of the larger children were the leaders. Each leader picked a color, no one else knew which color but them. They held hands and raised them high enough to form an arch. The rest of the students formed a line and marched under the arch, while ever one sang, Needles eye just apply thread that runs so truly, many a dark and stormy night, as I rode home with you, O you, O you many a dark and stormy night because I wanted you, and the arch was dropped, capturing the one under it. They were took aside and asked to pick a color, one the leaders had picked. No other child was all the children had picked a team. color. The lines were usually real tug of war began. If a small childs arms simply pull from those behind, everyone fell back. By this time everyone was so tickled they

Red Rover, Black Man and Pop the whip, were other favorite games. Another we played often was, Drop the handkerchief. Then there was always jump the rope, with everyone chanting, Grace Grace went upstairs to powder her face, how many boxes did she use? One, two, sometimes over a hundred as we counted ever jump till a miss. Another chant was, Ruth, Ruth dressed in yellow, went outside to kiss her fellow, how many kisses did she give? Start counting again.

Marbles was another great game, and sometime the girls joined in a game of marbles just as the boys jumped the rope with us.

How wonderful it was, the first warm days of spring to pull our shoes and stockings off, and go barefoot while we played the active games on the school vard.

The Friday afternoon spelling matches were the greatest think. I never hear of Railroad Spelling matches anymore. Are they a thing of

We would choose two leaders, older children were picked. They drew straws to see who started, whoever got the short straw choose first. First one and then the other choose a pupil, of course the smartest were chosen first. When all the children were chosen, two lines were formed one on each side of the room. The leader that starts first spells, railroad, the opposite leader then had to think of a word that allowed to hear. After they begins with the last letter in picked their color they got railroad. For instance, dove, behind that leader, then the the last letter than goes to the whole thing was repeated until next in line on the opposite

Most of the older children pretty well equal. A line was are fair enough to spell the marked on the ground, and a harder words, leaving the easy ones for the lower grades.

Some folks say railroad couldn't hold on, with all the spelling doesn't teach children to spell. They said that in my day, but we children loved it. It taught us to think quick. What is a word that begins with E? Envelope you think, spell and pronounce. As each child missed a word we took our seat, and listened as the other children spelled words. The next week we will remember some of those words. The teacher writes down each word as it is spelled. If someone spells a word that has already been spelled they were out. So we also have a memory lesson. Sometimes we even sent the teacher to the dictionary to be sure of the correct spelling of a word.

A lot of us looked up words that began with Zs and Xs, and learned to spell them after we had missed so we could remain in the game longer next time.

To add a little more spice and excitement to our schooldays were the rattlesnakes. They always denned up under our

The first warm days they began to crawl from under it. There was a hole close to the doorstep where they came out. The teacher or one of the older boys always went to the door and looked good before the other children were allowed to leave the building. One spring there were seven killed between the door and the windmill, where we had to go for a drink. It couldn't of been over fifty feet. No one was ever bitten by one while I was in school. It was no game, but deadly serious business when a shrill scream rang out, Rattlesnakes, one of the oldest and most dependable boys was assigned to run and get the hoe, which was at the school for that purpose, and kill the snake.
