Little League Spring Round-Up Begins Tomorrow

Eastland Little League players will begin Spring Round-Up here Wednesday at Little League practice field at 5 p.m.

Robert Lawson, president, said that all boys wanting to play should report to the field Wednesday afternoon. Workouts will be cut short so boys will have plenty of time to attend church.

The second day of Round-Up will be held Thursday and the final day is Friday. Players will be auctioned Friday.

Every boy must be registered by Friday if he is to play this year, Lawson explained.

Boys who will be eight by Aug. 1 and not more than 12 before Aug. 1 are eligible to play.

But that's one thing now that's wrong with almost all forms of advertising. Most of it is a long way from the truth, especially if the advertising goes in for very much description. The more ad writers tend to say about their client's product the more they seem to stray from the truth.

To my mind, the real pioneers in radio news broadcasting in the Southwest, especially as far as Eastland is concerned, were WBAP and WFAA, both operating on 820 kilocycles.

These two stations have shared this frequency for a long, long time, but they have not always shared it together. There was a brief spell in the early days of radio when WBAP shared a frequency with KTHS, then at Hot Springs, Ark., but now in Little Rock. WFAA then shared its frequency with KRLL briefly, but for some reason or other these two stations finally went back to sharing a joint frequency as they did originally. This is the condition that now exists and will continue to unless one of them wishes to give up a cleared channel.

WBAP's first studio was in the Star-Telegram with Harold Hough doing most, if not all of the announcing, under the name of the Hired Hand. He today is vice president of Carter Publications, the official name of the publishing company that published the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, and manager of the WBAP, WBAP-FM, and WBAP-TV. He grew up with the industry.

From time-to-time as WBAP's wattage increased for an ever-widening listening audience the station moved its studios. By the time it went on the air with a full 50,000-watt maximum power in the late 20's, about 1929, WBAP's studios were on top of the new Blackstone Hotel. That's the same Hotel that goes by the name of the Hilton in Fort Worth.

Later they moved their studios atop the Medical Arts building and stayed there until WBAP also went into the television business. Then had to increase their plant and studio capacity to accommodate television broadcasting so new studios for all three outlets were built in the Meadowbrook section of Fort Worth. Today WBAP broadcasts from these studios.

While all of this was happening WFAA in Dallas also was growing and prospering. After that station got to be a 50,000 station it moved its studios into Baker Hotel. Jimmie Jefferies, who was master of ceremonies of the Early Birds for many years used to refer to the Baker Hotel as "Mrs. Baker's Big Boarding House."

Then after a few years housed in Baker Hotel studios moved to their new and enlarged studios atop Dallas' Santa Fe Building. This past week, by the way, WFAA moved into its new studios next to the Dallas News Building, which is a consolidation of their television and radio

History of Texas Radio Stations Traced by Joe

By JOE GRAY

The other day I was Cruising down Highway 80 about halfway between here and Fort Worth when the radio station to which I was listening announced itself as the "news pioneer" station of the Southwest. Well, it so happens that this particular station didn't come on the air until 1946 and any station that late getting into the business has no right referring to itself as a pioneer in news broadcasting. Actually, I don't see how this Johnny-come-lately into the broadcasting business has a right to refer to itself as pioneer in anything.

But that's one thing now that's wrong with almost all forms of advertising. Most of it is a long way from the truth, especially if the advertising goes in for very much description. The more ad writers tend to say about their client's product the more they seem to stray from the truth.

Stage Bands to Present Festival Thursday Night

The first jazz contest to be held in this area in many years will be presented Thursday night in the Eastland high school auditorium. Stage bands from Eastland, Ranger, Cisco, Gorman and Rising Star will participate in the contests and a special featured attraction will be the appearance of the Crowell High School stage band, which won the showmanship award in this year's Brownwood Stage Band festival.

The contests will begin at 7:30 p.m. Admission prices will be 50c for adults and 25c for students. Bands will be judged by classes and the judges will include Clyde Peterson, band director at Anson, Bill Mayes, band director at Stamford and Earl Hesse, band director at Crowell.

Phil Hewett said the contest will feature the top musicians of the competing schools. The events will be similar to jazz contests held in the '30's but Hewett admits the "music may be a little different."

The public has been invited to attend.

Local Couple's Grandson Makes Good Use of Toes

Mike LaFan, son of Mr. and Mrs. James LaFan of Temple and the grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lusk of Eastland, was recently featured in an article which appeared in the Temple Telegram.

Telegraph reporter Beth Allen wrote:

Mike is almost completely paralyzed by polio. But Mike runs his electric wheelchair, his electric trains, an electric typewriter; writes; makes mosaics; and does ceramic work. For more than six years he has been completely helpless except for the toes on his left foot.

Like a student at Reagan Elementary school said when viewing some of Mike's work, "He has his toes better educated than my fingers are."

Mike can't remember when or how he learned to do so many things with his educated toes.

"I feel like I have been doing it all along; I know I haven't but I feel like it."

And he doesn't think its something no one else could do.

"If they tried hard enough they could do it. What I do is nothing really hard. You just have to set your mind on what you want to do and then do it."

Mike said he thinks people do what they can with what they have. "You just do all you can and that's all you can do," Mike said in explaining how he feels about his achievements.

Fifteen-year-old Mike said he used to hunt Easter eggs, but "It's more fun to watch Kevin (his six-year-old brother). Then I scindie what I can out of him. He doesn't like it. He saves them until they get rotten before he does anything with them. He likes to look at them, I guess."

Carbon Seniors To Present Play Friday Night

A LOSING CAUSE

What the editor don't know won't hurt him (much). At least that's what fellow staff members decided when they slipped in this picture. This picture of editor Virgil Moore was snapped during the Jaycee political campaign last Thursday. Moore was just getting warm on the subject of Kinnairdism when this shot was made. Later he pulled off his coat and rolled up his sleeves, but his candidate, Ben McKinnis, still lost by two votes to Grover Hallmark in the presidential race. (Canaris Studio Photo).

Gray Matter

have shared the same radio frequency they've been leaders in this thing of news broadcasting. As far as I know the first scheduled news casts on WFAA were at 7 a.m. and today they still broadcast a news program at 7 a.m. There is a little difference in the method of handling the news-cast today from what it was then. Then Eddie Dunn, the Early Bird announcer, read the news right out of the Dallas Morning News. And for a busy listener who himself didn't have time to read the paper while getting ready for work, this was as good as today's news-cast read from the specially prepared script. After all, news writing doesn't get much better than that of the Dallas Morning News.

The first news-cast I remember that was especially prepared for broadcasting was at the time of the Lindbergh Kidnapping trial. It was during this trial that Gabriel Heatter became a national figure. He was left in front of a hot mike for about an hour and after reading all of his prepared text had to do a job of filling in with a lot of ad-lib stuff. He did so well that he got a network job as a result of this stunt and is still in the business as a radio newscaster.

As the 30's moved along radio newscasting became a permanent fixture in the American way of life. WBAP put a 6:15 a.m. news broadcast on with James A. Bryan reading the news material as compiled in the Star-Telegram's news room daily. Many people thought this was too early in the morning to put on a news cast but the management of the station was gratified to find out that a lot of people are up and about by 6:15 a.m. Today James A. Bryan is still with WBAP and he has weekly news commentary each Sunday afternoon.

While all of this was going on a fellow by the name of Ken McClure was building up a vast listening audience each night at 10 p.m. over cleared-channel WOAL. McClure had a light touch with the news and a way of presenting it that caused people all over the country to turn their dials to 1200 every weekday night. By the time World War II arrived, WBAP had hired Ken McClure out from under WOAL and he was one of the most popular newscasters in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

The day and night following Pearl Harbor Ken McClure and John Hicks of the WBAP news announcing staff were on the air all day and all night long giving the public information about what was happening. About the first rest they got was when the station joined the network for the joint session of Congress for a Declaration of War against Japan.

Before the war the radio station in Fort Worth were WBAP-820, KGKO (which became WBAP-570 later), KFQB-KTAT, KFJZ. KGKO was founded in Wichita Falls and in the late 30's, about 1938, sold to Amon Carter and the Star-Telegram. In moving to Fort Worth the Star-Telegram didn't move a thing but the name and permit to broadcast. The remainder stayed in Wichita Falls and was sold to other people who obtained a license and now do business as KWFT.

After operating for a while under ownership of the Star-Telegram Amon Carter sold, or rented, half of the time to the station to WFAA and the Dallas Morning News. Thus, for the first time WFAA and WBAP studios were on the air both at the same time.

For some time, since 1929, their transmitting plant has been a joint operation located at Grapevine about halfway between Fort Worth and Dallas. But this method didn't last long. The broadcasters got permission to change the name of KGKO to WBAP-WFAA 570. That's the name it goes by now.

When WFAA is broadcasting out of its Dallas studios on 820 WBAP is broadcasting out of Fort Worth on 570. When WBAP is broadcasting on 820 out of Fort Worth WFAA is broadcasting out of Dallas on 570. This gives both stations fulltime outlets although all of the time is not 50,000-watt cleared-channel broadcasting.

Backing up a little, the KFQB-KTAT station mentioned early was the station founded by Fort Worth First Baptist Church. Rev. J. Frank Norris wanted an outlet for his church and his people built KFQB. Later in a fire the transmitter was destroyed, the church sold the permit to the people who did business as Texas Air Transport. They changed the call letters to KTAT. KTAT's studios were atop the Aviation Building, which is now called the Insurance Building, I believe. Anyway, it's the building right across from E. H. and A. Davis' store on Main at Seventh. At this time KTAT was a 1,000-watt station, sharing time with WACO at Waco, also a 1,000-watt station. KTAT at this time was a 250-watt station owned by the Meacham estate.

Later, Elliott Roosevelt became interested in KFJZ through his wife and he bought out KTAT and formed the Texas State Network. KFJZ moved to KTAT's frequency and took its call letters and power. Later the power was increased to its present 5,000 watts.

Over in Dallas the only prewar stations there were WFAA, KRLD, the times-Herald station, WRR, the municipal station, and sometime in 1941 KSKY went on the air. This last named station was the first station I ever heard of with only a daytime permit. It's frequency is a clear-channel outlet cleared for WNBC (then WEAF) in New York. Up till this time the Federal government didn't go in much for issuing limited-time licenses. But today there are all sorts of stations scattered all over the country that have limited-time permits. But before the war daytime stations were almost unheard of. As a matter of fact, as far as I know KSKY was the only one in Texas and the great Southwest before the war.

All of these stations dabbled now and then from their very beginning with some form of news broadcasting. Some of them of course did better jobs than others did, but I don't think it fair for a station that didn't come on the air until 1946 to claim to be a pioneer in news broadcasting. Actually it's plain false advertising for such a station to make such a claim.

WBAP, WFAA, and KRLD all are pioneers in newscasting. All of them have been in the business for a long time. All of them have fine staff of news gatherers and all of them have maintained for years well staffed newscasters.

When these stations were young in the business it was an insult to the listening public to play a record to a radio audience. WBAP and WFAA and KRLD all had fulltime live orchestras to play music. The Early Bird Show on WFAA was a live show until just a few short years ago and at the time it went off the air in favor of a disc jockey it was the oldest program on radio, being far older than the American Broadcasting Company's "Breakfast Club" which features Don McNeil. After all, McNeil didn't get on the air until sometime in 1929, broadcasting from WFAA studios in the Baker Hotel with Jimmy Jefferson as MC and Eddie Dunn announcing, ribbing Jimmy, and reading the news. Ah, there was a radio show!
