GINGER'S SAKE

By ETHEL HESTON
© 1930 THE BOBBIS-LEWELL CO.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Ginger's father was a minister, and her stepmother a very wealthy woman, but life in the little town of Red Thrush, Iowa, ran too slowly to suit Ginger and her set. So she announced to her friends, Eddy Jackson, Patty Sears and Wesley Meeker, that she was going to start a home for the Bored.

To Jenky Brooks, wife of old Benny Brooks, an ally whom she could trust implicitly, she confided her intention of organizing a Junior Country Club. She asked Jenky to act as an agent in the purchase of the Mill Rush farm, a 10-acre tract with an old farmhouse, from Joplin Westbury. The rest of her plans were still in her head, unformulated.

"And," she told Jenky, "be sure to bring him down in his price. About half of what he asks will be right."

To Jenky, who, with her husband, was to be chaperone, the venture promised to great many dollars saved, as a summer on the farm would mean a trimming of living expenses. The house on Mill Rush had interesting possibilities for an imagination as fertile as Ginger's. On the other hand, it was doing its present owner no good, and he was anxious to sell. Westbury finally got down to $2,000 whereupon Jenky said she would have to ask Ginger's advice.

Within 24 hours the farm had been bought for $1,500, and the organization of the Junior Country Club was under way.

CHAPTER V
The Junior Country Club was something to do. But conservative parents who comfortably believed that an entire summer of hard work would go into the necessary renovation of the property were due for a great surprise. They had not figured on Ginger Ella.

It was upon a Monday, the day after Easter, that inspiration visited her upon the parsonage lawn. By Tuesday night she was the owner—to the extent of $250 down—of the Mill Rush estate. At 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning she was on the premises for a thorough inspection of her property.

Dab Barnes, the carpenter, was making estimates on the cost of materials and labor for necessary repairs and Ginger Ella herself may be sure, with notebook and pencil in her own, dogged his heels, hotly contesting every figure.

She was delighted to find the house in better condition than had appeared. It would require complete redecorating and new hardwood floors downstairs.

ments, looking forward to future week-end parties.

The Donation Committee had succeeded beyond her fondest hopes. Bedding and linens sufficient to snugly fitting the entire house had been secured, Joplin Westbury contributing a dozen brand-new sheets and six pillows from his big store—only slightly stained, they were, from window display.

Phil promised an old grand piano and a new radio. The "Leslies" Country Club donated a complete service of plated silver. The Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist Church, in collaboration with the Ladies' Societies of the other two churches, provided dishes.

Eddy Jackson gave a decrepit buggy and an old sorrel mare. An old favorite, that mare, in the family of Eddy Jackson, as her first errand in their household had been to bring the nurse who officiated at the arrival of Eddy himself, and it was called "Mrs. Carter" for ever after. Wesley Meeker's father sent a large red-letter Bible.

Ceilers and pantries of every home within miles were scoured for donations of food, vegetables, canned fruits and bottled drinks. All of these demands and countless others, met with a cheerful response. Many had children already of proper age for membership and wished to curry immediate favor. Those with ineligible "parents" were looking to the future, and as Ginger said, "nobody is quite without hope," which principle doubtless explained why the Donation Committee met with no refusals.

The formal organization of the club was extremely informal. It called a private frankfurter roast on the last night of Wesley Meeker's vacation, and was attended by Ginger and Patty Sears, Ben and Jenky Brooks and Eddy Jackson, with Wesley as the guest of honor. Ginger Ella sat at the table with an immense notebook and a very fat fountain pen.

The grounds were badly grown up in brush and weeds, but she counted on the high-school boys to take care of that, depending on a judicious application of flattery for payment in full. The mile and a half of wood lane leading in from the state road was almost impassable for motor travel, and Dab promised to have a couple of men get to work on it the very next day.

By 8 o'clock on Saturday morning the road to Mill Rush was a stream of traffic, cars, two ponies and a saddleless old fire horse—all called in running-board or handle-bars with boys and girls from middle high school age up to the early twenties. Each was armed with tools for labor—brooms and hammers, hoes and rakes—and ready to take orders. And waiting for them at Mill Rush was Ginger Ella, burning up with orders to give.

Walter Main, the schoolhouse janitor who had stayed up half the night to give the building its weekly cleaning according to his contract with the school board, in order that he might join the staff at Mill Rush bright and early on Saturday morning, was put in charge of the younger boys and girls to clean up the grounds.

The older boys organized what they called a "road gang" to hurry up work on the road, and the girls, having discarded everything designed for the big fire, were noisily adjusting the furniture inside.

Carpenters, plasterers and plumbers were at work all over the place. A tennis court was being laid out under the supervision of Eddy Jackson in one of the choice garden plots, and Wesley Meeker, whose vacation was not yet over, was superintending the layout of hammocks and swings.

"Oh, Ginger!" cried Patty Sears. "It's just precious! How did you ever think of anything so nice?"

"Oh," explained Ginger lightly. "I always get bright ideas when I'm bored."

WHAT SCRIBES ARE WRITING
(Benny Butler in Cisco News)
There is a likelihood that a "one-year residence rule" will be invoked by the interscholastic league at its next meeting, those who are closely in touch with the high school athletic situation in the state tell us. The hue and cry of a number of people, particularly the sports scribers in the larger cities, have scribbled against what they term "importing players" has contributed largely to a league attitude which frowns on the practice of smaller schools re-enforcing their slender ranks with players from other sections and by and by this practice is going to be as difficult as smuggling a case of "Dripping Springs" into the W. C. T. U. headquarters.

Not that the practice is so reprehensible. But it strikes at the logical superiority of people, particularly by enabling those with much less students to keep on par with them. It is easily attacked from the standpoint of over-emphasizing athletics and once obliterated it strikes a serious blow at the smaller high schools.

The rule proposed would require that a player who transfers from a school with 15 or more units of affiliation must reside one year in the school to which he has transferred before he can be eligible for participation in interscholastic sports. He may transfer from a school with less than 15 units and be eligible immediately provided the larger school to which he transfers is the nearest school of 15 or more units of affiliation to that from which he transfers. Otherwise the one-year residence rule would apply.

Cisco, with the poorest prospects for a football team next year that it has ever had, may well think about this probable situation.

Many at Rites Honoring Hero of Civil War

RANGER, Texas, Jan. 20.—A large and reverent assembly gathered to pay tribute to the memory of a hero Sunday afternoon, the occasion being the presentation of a tombstone, given by the national government, for the grave of James Alfred White, Confederate veteran who died in 1919.

Dr. C. C. Craig was in charge of the program. Dr. H. A. Logsdon and Post Commander T. A. Tune of the American Legion spoke. Color-bearers had an impressive part in the ceremony. A wreath was placed on the grave, three volleys were fired by the firing squad

SPIES!

Profession As Old As World, But Late War Developed Race of Super-Spies That Made History

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last of Ralph Heinzen's articles on the peace time espionage systems of Europe. It deals with the profession of spying in a general way.

By RALPH HEINZEN United Press Staff Correspondent (Copyright, 1931, by United Press)

PARIS, Jan. 20.—Spying, as a profession, is almost as old as civilization. Moses sent his agents into Canaan for information. During the World War, Germany had 32,000 men, women and children in her spy service, civil and military, and as many more agents of the Allies operated in and on both sides of No Man's Land.

The world may look askance at a spy and may not see the glory in the brief careers of Mata Hari, Louise de Bettigny, Bolo Pasha, Eva Hornetter, arrested at Calais a month before war broke out in 1914 with plans of the defense of every fortified port along the French coast, but to the spies these names are written in a Hall of Fame.

Secret Channels

At the outbreak of the World War it became evident that the secret agents could not cross the firing lines with information. It became necessary to find secret channels so that the constant stream of information could not be checked.

Switzerland and Holland were used. There it was found that Spain, more remote from the front was a good base also.

The Germans made particularly effective use of Spain. It was a clearing house for news carried by spies from France. The German Embassy in Madrid hummed like a bee hive. Mata Hari was only one of the famous figures that worked out of the chief spy's office there.

There was an efficient German news center at Barcelona. This one took particular care of news from the trenches, while the elite agents in the capital took care of state secrets, government preparations, troop preparation and, especially, financial problems of the continuation of the war.

Many French and Belgian deserters found their way to Spain, without any resources. Some of them joined the German spy organization.

The French, too, sent spies in to Spain to watch the Germans and particularly to spy on spies. That was the way Mata Hari was traced, shadowed and finally set at a firing squad in the moat at Vincennes.

Famed Spy

Famous among all spies in Madrid was "Alice Dubois," the name under which Madame Louise de Bettigny was known in spydom and on the books of the French general staff. Captain Felix Bauman, an officer in the German Intelligence Service, wrote that "Germany had nothing to offer to compare with the craft, courage, sang-froid and results obtained" by Alice Dubois. She never used the same trick twice. Twenty-two times she furnished information and maps to the French and British of German artillery batteries. Eighteen times her information resulted in total annihilation of that artillery.

On a thin sheet of paper, of Chinese fabrication, which she inserted in a hollowed tooth of her dog and sent back to the French from inside the German lines, she wrote 3,000 words about the position, strength, equipment and morale of German troops.

Trained Dog

She wrote other messages and rolled them in the hollow rims of eye-glasses which a young Belgian wore when he escaped across the Dutch border. She trained a dog to leap over the electric fence which the Germans strung along the Dutch border and the dog carried hundreds of messages into Holland, where French agents awaited at the home kennel. Alice Dubois, herself vaulted this fence many times. She got seven Belgian officers out of German prison camps and across the border into Holland by loading two wagons with hay. They drove to the frontier, one with the seven men under the hay, German frontier guards drove long spears through one of the hay wagons and allowed the two to pass. Alice Dubois had drawn up the hay with the officers beneath on the side nearest the guards. Her trick worked.

She was finally followed from Spain, arrested in Tournai and sentenced to 20 years, but she died at Cologne after an operation.

Women Seek Way To End All Warfare

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—Representatives of women's organizations scattered throughout the entire United States met here today to discuss the reasons behind war and ways of ending them.

They came to take part in the seventh annual Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, an institution founded in 1925 by Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt of New York City, famous suffrage leader. The conferences are participated in by 12 women's organizations.

This Year's Theme "The Demobilization of the War Machine" was chosen as the theme of the conference, preceding the proposed World Disarmament Conference at Geneva in 1932. Various speakers of note are on the program.

These include Senator David Reed, Pepp, Pa., one of the American delegation to the London Naval conference; Miss Jane Addams, president of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom; Paul Kellogg, magazine editor; James G. MacDonald, chairman of the Foreign Policy Association; and Charles E. Warner, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics.

High Spots One of the high spots of the conference, according to its leaders, will be a round table discussion of "World Empires" This is to be shared in by representatives of a number of nations.

Sponsors of the conference include the Federation of Women's Clubs, the League of Women Voters, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Women's Trade Union League, the American Federation of University Women, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and several religious and missionary groups. The meetings will extend through Thursday night.

Truth Revealed About "Tell It To The Marines"

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—"Tell it to the Marines," the popular phrase familiar to millions in the United States and Great Britain, was exploded with a bang as a genuine bit of history as the result of an inquiry by Brigadier General George Richards of the U. S. Marine Corps.

According to the original legend possessed an advisor who was a retired Colonel of Marines and had traveled everywhere and seen everything. Whenever the monarch heard a remarkable story, count the quotation he would refer to his Marine advisor to find out whether or not it was true. Hence the King's remark.

General Richards searched through all existing Pepys material, including an unbridged manuscript in the Library of Congress to prove or disprove the legend.

Then he wrote a letter to W. P. Drury, English novelist and retired colonel of the British Marine Corps. The answer ended the hunt for "The story of Tell it to the Marines is taken," Drury wrote, "from my earliest literary crime, 'The Petrified Eye.' It is a leg-pull of my youth of which I have grown a little ashamed. I seem to have forced the style of Samuel Pepys so successfully that many Better Breakfasts WARM breakfasts are needed for these wintry days, but in order to make them a complete success, they must be not only warm but varied. And, of course you want plenty of canned and preserved fruits in winter to keep up your summer average of fruit consumption. Here's a suggestion for a breakfast which combines both these elements: Baked Peaches with Bacon Poached Eggs on Whole Wheat Toast Quince Preserves Toast Hot Beverage To make the first dish arrange the peach halves from a No. 2 1/2 can, cavity side up, in a shallow pan. Cut eight slices of bacon in halves, and lay across over the peach halves. Or, roll up the slices and
