Paul Montgomery Confesses Dropped Bombs on Mines

MURPHYSBORO, Ill., Aug. 13.—Paul Montgomery, 26, confessed today that he was the aviator who early Monday morning dropped bombs on a coal mine at Providence, Ky., said Sheriff Flanagan.

tion was made to a Department of Justice agent and a mine union official, neither of whose names was revealed, in addition to Sheriff Flanagan.

"I had to do it," Flanagan quoted Montgomery as saying. "I was afraid they would kill me 'if I didn't. I left here in my plane at daylight Monday and flew over Providence."

The newest deprecation was believed a continuation of an attempt by unidentified persons to interfere with operations of non-union mines in the Providence area.

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 13.—Senator Joseph T. Robinson, veteran Democratic politician, apparently had weathered today the first opposition he had faced in a primary election for 12 years.

Early returns from scattered precincts in yesterday's primary indicated Robinson would hold a three-to-one lead over his opponent, Tom W. Campbell, the first man in more than a decade to match political wits with the senator.

The gubernatorial race was much more hotly contested. On the basis of counted returns it appeared Gov. Harvey Parnall had gained renomination over Brooks Hays.

The gubernatorial race revolved around the issues of a state income tax and highway matters. The race for seven congressional seats provided little interest. Four of the candidates were unopposed.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Aug. 13.—John H. Bankhead, whose brother is in congress and whose father was once a senator, appeared today to have been nominated for the senate by a margin of better than two to one, as tabulation of returns from yesterday's Alabama primary election continued.

Running with him will be either B. M. Miller, for many years a judge of distinction, or Lieut. Governor W. C. Davis. They lead a field of four other candidates by decided margins, but the lead changed from one to the other and the outcome was doubtful.

The candidates for senator and governor assume more than usual importance, for they must carry the banner of the regular Democratic ticket in the November election against Thomas J. Heflin running for senator and Judge Hugh Locke running for governor, under the name of "Jeffersonian Democrats."

This split in the Democratic party is the outgrowth of the desertion of Alfred E. Smith by Heflin and his supporters in the 1928 campaign and their subsequent punishment by being read out of the Democratic party.

Not so fortunate was another party bolter in the presidential campaign of 1928—Dr. Jennie Callfas, national Democratic committee woman, who supported Herbert Hoover. She was defeated by a four to one margin by Gilbert M. Hitchcock, Omaha publisher and former United States senator, for the Democratic nomination.

Governor Arthur Weaver had rolled up a three to one victory over Harry Palmer, of Omaha, for the Republican gubernatorial nomination while former governor Charles Bryan and enjoying almost a five to one lead over Anton Jensen for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

In the only upset in the congressional contests, congressman Willa G. Sears, of Omaha, failed to be renominated from the second district. He was defeated by Malcolm Baldrige, a former Yale football player, and a wet, who campaigned for the Canadian system of dispensing liquor in the United States.

The Democratic senatorial nomination went to a dry, George W. White of Marietta, another former congressman.

They will oppose the Republican incumbents, U. S. Senator Roscoe C. McCulloch, Canton, and Governor Myers V. Cooper, Cincinnati, both nominated without opposition.

White's opponent, Stephen M. Young, Cleveland, was an avowed wet and like Buckley openly campaigned for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and restoration of state option in regulation of the liquor traffic.
