Ferguson Glad Moody and Love For Sterling

AUSTIN, Tex., July 28.—"I am indeed grateful to Governor Dan Moody and to Senator Thomas B. Love for their aid to Mrs. Ferguson's campaign," said former governor James E. Ferguson today upon the announcements of Moody and Love that they will support her opponent.

"Love will not have as many votes altogether as Mrs. Ferguson had above the vote of her nearest opponent," added Governor "Jim." He said it has not yet been decided where and when she will open the run-off campaign but likely will be decided in a day or so.

Numerous telegrams of congratulation were pouring into the Forum office, where Jim makes his headquarters.

There was much jubilation there. Among other cheering signs they saw was the fact that the combined vote of the two candidates who supported a state road bond issue apparently was less than Mrs. Ferguson alone received, although she was only one of several candidates who vigorously opposed road bonds.

AUSTIN, Tex., July 28.—The people have righted a wrong which they did when she was refused the customary second term of office, is former governor Miriam A. Ferguson's reaction to the vote Saturday in which she led a score of citizens who joined officers in a search for them during the night.

Barrett sustained a gunshot wound in the arm when he attempted to stop a fight between two negroes who had a razor fight in a rooming house. The officer returned the fire as the negroes fled after firing half a dozen shots, and believed he wounded one.

Law forces expected to resume the search today.

Chestnut and Smith of Ranger and the Gordon Tigers won their games of the opening day of the Oilbelt Baseball Tournament.

Chestnut & Smith team had little difficulty in defeating the Olden team, however the Olden team sparked at times. The showing of the Ranger team will make them one of the top heavy favorites to capture one of the purses.

With their victories, there two teams will meet in the semi-finals next Sunday, while the Eastland Horned Frogs will encounter the Jake Hamon Oil company team for the second double header of the tournament.

The Gordon team, by virtue of its win on a forfeit from the Rucker team, advanced into the semi-finals of the meet. The Rucker team was unable to appear because the players had to work. The Gordon team played an exhibition game against a "pick-up" team and showed plenty of batting power.

Cydas, Hargrove, and Denismore were the outstanding players in the Chestnut & Smith victory, while Nixon and Overby were

Two other members of the British aristocracy and the two pilots also were instantly killed when the plane, returning with its passengers from a week-end at Le Touquet, France, fell apart and crashed in pieces to the ground.

Texas Will Not Stand For Proxy Governor—Moody

AUSTIN, Texas, July 28.—"Texas will not stand a repetition of 1925-26. This state will not again be shamed at home and ridiculed abroad by the ridiculous spectacle of a proxy government," said governor Dan Moody in announcing that he stands ready to take the stump for whoever opposes the Fergusonism in the run-off campaign for the democratic nomination for governor of Texas.

DALLAS, Tex., July 28.—A multi-millionaire newspaper publisher and a nationally known woman who jans and preserves have gained state wide recognition for their piquancy will be paired against each other for the democratic nomination for governor of Texas in the runoff election to be held August 22.

Out of a field of 11 candidates, seven of whom had high hopes of nomination, the widely known Houston capitalist, Ross Sterling, and Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson, wife of former Jim Ferguson, emerged successful from Saturday's elimination primary and are expected to inspire immeasurable interest in the race to come.

Overwhelmed in her race for reelection for the governorship four years ago, the domesticated wife of Texas' most adroit politician has come out on top of the heap again. If she wins in the run-off she will make her fourth trip to the Texas White House, twice in her own name, and twice as wife of "Tommy" Jim, who was governor for a term and a half.

of Texas is honest government. I hope that all friends of good government, regardless of past political affiliations will aid me in the forthcoming campaign.

No two candidates in the wide field could have afforded more contrast for the run-off. The two most picturesque figures in the race were the first and second choices of the voters in the trial heat.

Capital, Labor to Clash
It will be a brand new clash between capital and labor—political factors as old as the ballot box, and no basis for speculation on the outcome is convincing at the present time.

U. S. Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas, seeking re-nomination for a fourth term, was handily from R. L. Henry of Houston, wet opponent. All but one of the Mrs. Ferguson led Sterling by more than 55,000 votes on the basis of returns from 241 out of 253 counties, 49 of which were complete returns.

Sterling issued a statement at noon today.

"On the basis of unofficial returns compiled by the Texas Election Bureau, it appears that I will be in the Democratic run-off primary as a candidate for governor," he said.

"I am deeply grateful for the support accorded me in Saturday's primary and appreciate from the bottom of my heart the efforts made in my behalf by citizens over the state and by a large number of newspapers.

"The issue now before the people of Texas is not one of party politics but of the future of the state. The losing candidate was John C. Box of the second district, Jr. of Orange, Tex.

While Mrs. Ferguson will be governor if elected, "Farmer Jim" makes no secret of the fact that he will be her chief adviser as he was before.

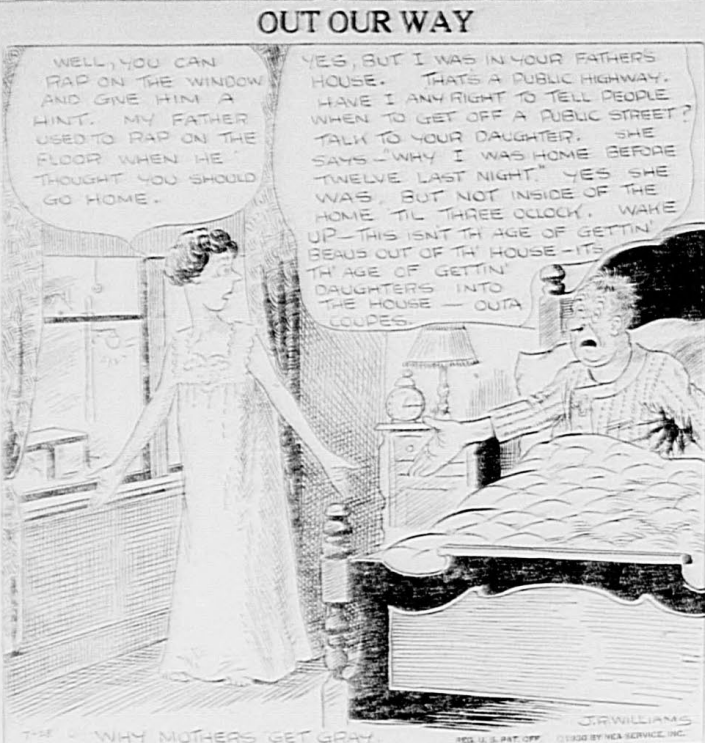

So in reality, the gubernatorial runoff will be between the "dirt farmer" candidate who has been heard from the Texas stump and on for 18 years, and a newcomer in the field of politics who has tremendous support.

Ross Sterling and Jim Ferguson are both sons of the soil. Both began life as poor boys, and battled their way to unquestioned success without favor or family name.

Sterling is a product of the coast country. He earned his "first hundred" operating a little freight boat on Galveston Bay, and in turn got into business as a cross-roads merchant and then as a village bank cashier.

From two oil wells he bought in the Humble field as a young man there grew the powerful Humble Oil and Refining Company, which he built up. He sold his part of it five years ago for a sum that ran high into eight figures, and he also owns newspaper properties, skyscrapers, real estate and other things to the extent he is one of the state's wealthiest men.

Shamrock Negro On Trial Today
Charged With Assaulting and Murdering White Woman.

MIAMI, Tex., July 28.—Ten jurors to hear the trial of Jesse Lee Washington, negro, for murder in the slaying of Mrs. Henry Vaughan, a white woman, were selected when court adjourned at noon today.

Thirty-one witnesses were examined, and the box was expected to be filled this afternoon.

The courtroom was under heavy guard to forestall the possibility of disorder. Four Texas rangers under M. T. "Lone Wolf" Gonzalez and numerous peace officers were in the room.

Four men, termed suspicious characters, were removed from the court by the rangers and searched for weapons. None were found.

Washington was brought here from the Pampa jail. He was indicted for the slaying of Mrs. Vaughan by beating her with a gas pipe following a brutal attack at her country residence.

MIAMI, Tex., July 28.—Jesse Lee Washington, negro, charged with the assault and murder of Mrs. Henry Vaughan, white woman, at Shamrock, went to trial here today under a heavy guard.

Judge Jesse Ewing, presiding over the trial, has anticipated a trial to last about two weeks, but he expects no such prolongation, however. It was reported that the negro would be returned to jail at Pampa each night during the trial.

Efforts of Judge Ewing to obtain a Shamrock attorney to assist the negro's defense have failed.

PECAN GROWERS COULD EXPAND THEIR MARKET
Although pecan growers produce annually about 12,000,000 pounds of improved varieties, the survey by the United States Department of Agriculture indicates possibilities for further expanding the market to take care of expected increases in production in the near future. In addition to the 12,000,000 pounds of improved varieties which are sold in the United States, there are about 28,000,000 pounds of seedling varieties produced annually and shelved commercially.

Most of the improved varieties of pecans are produced in the Southern States east of the Mississippi River. Only a limited quantity of pecans are imported from Mexico, and there are practically no exports.

The survey shows an average per capita consumption of pecans (combined with the study showed). The pecan has been considered a luxury nut. Prices for unshelled pecans have been higher than for other nuts. It is estimated that about one-half of the grocery stores in the area surveyed carried unshelled pecans. Practically no advertising effort has been

TALKING HEN EXHIBIT FOR WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS

No one ever saw a hen 7 feet high or heard one speak the English language. Neither has anyone ever observed the internal workings of a hen in full operation, nor a lot of other things shown in an exhibit prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture (Congress now being held in London July 22-30, 1930).

This "talking hen" is made of wood, well-oiled, and a few feathers, and has a set of mechanical internal organs. These organs are visible and show how feed is taken in, ground up, digested and distributed.

The specifications of this hen are somewhat similar to those of the new model automobiles: Full-view, extra large crop, fitted with window, copper-lined stomach; flexible rubber intestines; variable speed control on gizzard (a grinding machine); and a heart which is represented by a 2-valved pump.

The rate of laying eggs can be arranged to suit one's fancy in this exhibit by speeding up the small motor which operates the lathe on which the eggs are turned. Small mammals made of German silver are attached to the various machines and seem to be furnishing the power for their operation. Actually, the power comes from electric motors installed behind the exhibit.

This hen is fitted with a strong voice, and a special phonograph record gives her an opportunity to explain the internal processes which are observed by the visitors. She speaks with an American accent, although her larynx and throat must be regarded typically British, because the phonograph and amplifying apparatus are rented in London.

Of course, this bird can not give a complete course on the subject of nutrition, says the department, but she can hit the high spots and attract the attention of visitors to the remainder of the exhibit, which explains in greater detail certain phases of nutrition.

The exhibit will be returned to the United States as soon as the congress is over and will be used at State fairs.

SEEK TO BREED NEW RACES OF HONEYBEES

The United States Department of Agriculture is attempting to develop a new race of honeybees superior to any now serving the beekeeper.

Specialists in the Government bee laboratory near Washington, D. C., are testing and attempting to improve various methods for the artificial insemination of queen bees devised within the past few years in this country and abroad.

Once such technique is made more practicable they will assemble elements of the more important races of honeybees and will combine the desirable characteristics of all of them into one or two new races, just as the livestock breeder seeks in his breeding operations to improve his animals.

The bee breeders hope their work will go even further than this by producing new types with the desirable traits developed to a greater degree than in any races now known.

First, beekeepers would like bees which considerably larger honey stomachs so they can carry more nectar on each trip. They hope for a bee with a larger thorax and a greater wing expanse so that it can fly under more adverse conditions and carry heavier loads. For northern climates a bee that can fly in cooler weather is sought. A honeybee is capable of sucking nectar from the depths of long-tubed flowers would be welcome.

A race that would breed rapidly but not swarm excessively and would be immune to contagious diseases is another hope of the breeders. And last but not least, a gentle, sociable honeybee with a good disposition is more to the hearts of the men who work with bees.

"The honeybee has been longer in man's service than most domestic animals," James I. Hamilton, head of the Government bee laboratory says, "but the bee can not be classed as a domestic animal. It leaves for the woods on the slightest provocation and is just as well satisfied there as ever. We believe we can really domesticate the honeybee and can make bee breeding as profitable to the beekeeper as careful breeding now is for the livestock man."

New Rural Buildings

A dual-purpose type of building is appearing in rural communities which fulfills more functions, houses more activities and centralizes the varied economic and social interests of the community more effectively than does the ordinary community building, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Modern farm organizations recognize that farming is a mode

"Daylight-Saving" Birds
The graceful arctic terns, some of which breed close to the North Pole and spend their winters not far from the South Pole, are without doubt the champion "globe trotters" and "daylight savers" of the bird world. Some individuals must make an annual round trip of about 22,000 miles from their breeding grounds to their winter quarters and return. They also probably enjoy more hours of daylight than any other creature living; before they reach their breeding grounds in the Arctic the mid-night sun has already appeared while during their sojourn in the Antarctic daylight is continuous.

Individual birds of this species, according to Frederick C. Lincoln, of the Biological Survey of the United States Department of Agriculture, make the longest flights known to science. An arctic tern banded as a chick says its coast of sulfur, try found about three months later near La Rochelle, France. Another (banded at the same point) was found on the beach at Margate, about southwest of Port Shepley, South Africa, about that theater fire. She is brought back to New York and tells them she may never be able to dance again. Bastien Dumont, a young artist who loves Judith, visits her at the hospital.

MOM'N POP

Now go on with the story CHAPTER XL Dumont saw Judy oftener than anybody else during the next three or four days. She seemed to like him to sit with her. She was gentle and kind to him. She took a great interest in his work. They were days that passed like a dream to the young artist. He was unbelievably happy. Each day he thought Judy looked more as if she were coming back to life. She said she had hardly any pain left, and she was healing up splendidly. They were truly golden September days, and all his life Bastien never forgot them.

Now and then he thought Judy was not quite as gay as usual. He was afraid that she was in pain, and was concealing it; but the next moment the pensive, troubled look would leave her face, and she would burst out with stories of all the wonderful new friends she had made, and how they were to her, and sent her presents, and were so kind and lovely that it seemed as if she had known them all her life. "Bastien," she would say, with tears in her eyes, "did ever a girl have more friends than I?"

And he would look at her with his whole soul in his beautiful eyes, and would feel his heart burning within him for joy. He would never stop to reckon what he would have to pay for these blissful hours in loneliness and heartache and useless longing when Judy was well again, and had gone out into the world on her conquering way.

One day she said to him, just as he was going away:

"Bastien, are they saying that I am going to marry Mr. Gideon?"

"I believe most of them think so, Judy."

"You can tell them I am not. He asked me to, Bastien, but I said no."

"I don't think I ever believed you would, Judy," he said. "Only, of course, you were about with him a great deal."

"I know, I played a little game with him, Bastien, if you want to know. He didn't want to marry me—you can imagine that. He didn't think I was good enough; but he found he couldn't get me any other way."

The young man was white. His hands were clenched.

"Judy!" he said, and he shook with a frenzy of rage.

"It's all right, Bastien," she said. "You needn't worry. Mr. Gideon asked me to marry him, and I refused. We're more than quits. You can tell the boys that I'm not going to marry him."

"Judy, you always said you would never marry until you fell in love. Aren't you ever going to fall in love?"

"Oh, Bastien!"

She heaved a deep sigh, although she laughed, too. He saw the sadness in her eyes, and he wondered and wondered, having no inkling of the truth.

"Bastien," she went on, "Chummy hasn't been near me since she first came—that was four days ago. What has become of her? Do you think they've been married?"

"Oh, Judy, you should have heard," he replied.

"I wish they would!" she cried. "I do wish they would!"

Her eagerness seemed natural to him, so he missed the feverish note in her voice. As he said good-by, she took one of his hands and laid her cheek against it for a second, just like a child. Before he could stop himself he had bent and kissed her hair.

"Dear old Bastien!" Judy murmured. "You're such a pal!"

Dumont thought it strange that he had not seen either Chummy or Steyne at the Cafe Turc for several nights. Perhaps they had gone off and been married without saying anything. They couldn't have made much of a festivity of it, anyhow, with Judy laid up.

He thought he would look in at Chummy's studio on his way back. It was then about half past six. The day had been one of melting heat, and the atmosphere was dark and threatening. It felt like a storm. A few heavy raindrops fell as Bastien reached Chummy's building. He hoped it was not the breakup of those wonderful, golden days.

Not a sound was to be heard in the building. Dumont reached her door and knocked at her door. There was no response. He knocked again with the same result.

He tried the door, then, and found that it was not locked; so he went in.

Chummy's place was rather dark at all times. There was a little dark lobby that led into the studio, where, of course, it was light, but a curtain shut off the entrance. Leading out of the lobby on the right was a dark passage that led into the tiny gallery where Chummy's cooking was done. Her bedroom was on the other side of the studio.

The storm made it even darker this evening. Dumont stumbled against a tall oil jar that was meant to hold umbrellas. He called out Chummy's name, but there was no reply.

Just as he was going out, he smelled gas. The odor was strong.

He thought Chummy must have gone out and left a burner on. He had better look into her gallery; so he went along the little passage and opened the door of the tiny kitchen.

Here the fumes of gas were almost overpowering. He dared not light a match, so he groped in his way forward, as the little place was almost dark.

He gave a cry as he nearly fell over something soft. Bending, he found that it was Chummy, quite unconscious, his fair head lying normally.

"Bastien!" she gasped.

"Chummy!" he replied, with as much reproach as relief. "What a dreadful thing to do! It was lucky that I came in time!"

And then the proud, reserved Chummy came to the end of her self-control.

"I wish you hadn't come!" she cried. "I wish you hadn't come!"

She broke down completely, and it was terrible to watch.

Little by little, Dumont managed to soothe her and to bring her back to normal behavior; but she was completely demoralized mentally, and could no more control her words than a person out of her mind.

She did what she would never have done, what she would rather have died than done, if she had been herself—she told him the truth.

"Bastien, you should have let me be. It's the only way out of it. Judy and Alan love each other, but they won't take their happiness because of me!"

At first Dumont thought Chummy must be mad. He had not had the faintest inkling of such a situation. He put it down to the gas. It had poisoned her mind. But, little by little, through her disorganized volition and her eloquent words, he came to see that she knew what she was talking about.

She gave chapter and verse. While the floodgates were open, the flood flowed through.

Judy and Alan loved each other. They had loved even more strongly since Alan came back. Alan had quite forgotten her, she said. Probably he had never loved her.

He had been very fond of her as a friend—that was all; but he loved Judy. How could any man help loving Judy?

The last sentence was so true that Dumont laughed, and Chummy did not know that it was the laughter of despair.

"But why did one never guess?" he asked.

"Because they didn't want any one to guess, Bastien," she said, still unable to keep anything back.

"They wanted to keep it from me. It was Judy at first—you know Judy; but afterward it was Alan, too. She made him see it that way."

"How do you know?"

"Because I do know—I can't help it. It was just before we were going to be married the first time—last year—I can't tell you, but I saw them together, and I knew. They were saying good-by. Judy knew I loved him. She wouldn't take him from me. You know Judy. They didn't know I'd heard and seen."

"And then," said the young man, growing enlightened, "you suddenly decided that you must put your work before Steyne?"

Chummy nodded.

"Judy always thought you'd had a quarrel, you know."

"Yes, I know. I don't think she guessed at the time; but afterward she knew that I knew."

"Aren't you imagining things?"

"No, Bastien, I'm sure of it. Then, you know, she made her great success and went away, and I believe she took up with Mr. Gideon so that Alan shouldn't think about her any more. You know Judy." It was pathetic how she repeated those three words. "She would never marry him while I was there—I know that."

"But then," put in Dumont, intently puzzled, "you were going to be married—now?"

"I know," Alan drifted back somehow. I expect it was because Judy had gone and there was all that talk about Mr. Gideon. I don't know, but there it was; and I was persuaded again myself, Bastien. I ought to have known that he hadn't forgotten her. I thought perhaps he had; but on the night when we heard about the fire at the theater—the night when we were all at the cafe—then I knew once and for all. None of you noticed him, I think; but I did. I just saw him die, Bastien!"

Dumont looked at her and was moved to action. Telling her to sit still, he went out, brewed coffee, and forced her to drink a cup. She had recovered somewhat, but she looked as if she had shaken hands with death.

Business Goes To The MODERN Store

Stores that are modern in appearance compel people to notice them. They invite more business.

To be modern, a store building need not be new. Many shabby, old-fashioned stores can be converted into attractive, business-inviting establishments quickly and economically. An exterior facing of cast stone or light-tinted stucco, a rearrangement of window space, an attractive terrazzo floor, a new colored sidewalk—such changes will make an astonishing improvement in any old store.

Such improvements as these not only draw more customers, but they increase the value of the property, lessen the fire hazard and lower the cost of maintenance.

If you would like to know more about modernizing, write to us direct or consult your building material dealer, architect or contractor, any of whom can help you with such further information as you desire.

Atlas Cement is made at Waco—by Texas workers—of Texas materials. . . . Along with other economical quality products, your building material dealer can quickly furnish you either Atlas portland cement (gray) or non-staining Atlas White portland cement. Ask for Atlas cement.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"TRUTH" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, Sunday, July 27.

The Golden Text was from Psalms 108: 3, 4. "I will praise thee, O Lord among the people; and I will sing praises unto thee among the nations. For thy mercy is great above the heavens; and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds."

The citations comprising the services included the following from the Bible: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8:32).

What Do We Gain?

BIG BILL TILDEN, the fellow who announced several months ago that he was through with international tennis competition, will play with America's Davis Cup team against France, F. E. Dixon, Davis Cup captain, Joseph W. Wear, chairman of America's Davis Cup committee and Tilden himself held off until the last minute the announcement that the tall Philadelphia would aid the United States in her efforts to wrest the ancient tennis emblem from France.

But what are we gaining—? What does it all amount to? It means that America will have a real veteran, but a cantankerous old guy, on which she may fall back. It means, too, that we're strengthening our team at the last moment, which may react very much in the nature of a bomb bursting in the French ranks. It might also mean that America now will win the Davis Cup and return to the pinnacle from which the French shoved us a few seasons ago.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

FOUR or five times is all that Bill Tilden ever uses one tennis racket. . . . He discarded it then for a new one. . . . The discards always go to William T. Tilden III, No. 1 ranking player on the Haverford school team and nephew of Big Bill II. . . . Young Bill bids fair to become as great in the tennis game as his uncle. . . . He's the son of Herbert M. Tilden, Big Bill's brother, who died 15 years ago. . . . Philadelphia tennis fans say that Herb was better than Bill. . . . but he gave up competitive play to develop his brother into the greatest tennis player this country has known. . . . Young Bill looks like Uncle Bill. . . . he's 16, weighs 175, stands a half inch over six feet tall and has a marked facial resemblance to his uncle. . . . Uncle Bill showed me how to hold a racket a long time ago," said the boy. . . . "It's one of the first things I can remember." . . . Bill III wears knickers when he plays. . . . Which offers quite a contrast to Bill II in white ducks.

Conniving Is the Word

ON the other hand, it means that we did a little conniving—conniving it would be called in the boxing racket. We took advantage of every conceivable technicality in setting Big Bill's appointment. We conveniently shoved aside a very peculiar, amateurish rule which forbids a player to write on the tournament in which he competes in order that Tilden may tell us of the practice play. When the actual challenge round begins, however, our amateurish rule will make him stop. And we out Johny Doe, the young Californian, who has traveled thousands of miles and put in many long hours of grueling practice for the coming event.

Yes, America may win the cup now that Tilden will play. If she does, there will be rejoicing. Even if Tilden doesn't win a match and the youngsters come through to vic-

On its banner is the Soul-inspired motto, 'Slavery is abolished.' The power of God brings deliverance to the captive. No power can withstand divine Love. What is this soul-power, which opposes it? What is it that binds man with iron shackles to sin, sickness and death? Whatever enslaves man is opposed to the divine government. Truth makes man free."

again if the old man were released. The victim's widow, a Cabbage even before her marriage to young Fred, is bitter against the old man, and is expected to testify against him. "Uncle Jake" who first said he shot the youth because "he wouldn't behave himself," has not told his side of the story to anyone but his attorneys since he fired a shotgun into the boy's body. The old man's homestead has been under a cloud of suspicion ever since the shooting, his three young children leaving after telling of seeing ghosts in the yard at the spot where Fred Cabbage was killed.

Mountain Clansman Faces Murder Charge

LURAY, Va., July 28.—Eighty-year-old "Uncle Jake" Cabbage, grizzled head of a Blue Ridge Mountain clan, began a fight for his life today, assertedly confident he would be cleared of the murder of his 19-year-old grandson, Fred Cabbage. A Page county grand jury met this morning to consider the case, and was expected before nightfall to return a murder indictment against the aged man. The trial is scheduled to begin in a few days if the indictment is returned, as expected. While "Uncle Jake" still professes to believe the trial jury will acquit him on his plea of self-defense, he has lost some of the bravado displayed when he was first brought here for safekeeping after the shooting of the boy in Cabbage Hollow on June 8. "The shooting had stirred up old mountain enmities and authorities feared friends of the slain youth might start fired guns blazing

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

WASHINGTON—It must be that people who pay any attention to Washington at all visualize it as a cluster of white buildings in which the president works, Congress sputts and various bureaucrats sit at desks to transact business in a mysterious nature which means very little to anyone. As for the people here, the average citizen doubtless remembers something about Mr. Hoover, Mrs. Gann, Senator Borah, Bishop Cannon, Walter Johnson, Congressman DeForest, Alice Longworth, the British ambassador and Joe Grundy.

As a matter of fact, there are about 800,000 persons living in the District of Columbia and its surrounding suburbs, which means that this is a community of considerable size as well as the nation's capital. As regards the white population Washington might be called a city of the middle class, for there are no factory workers here and no element of foreign-born.

Like the Rest of Us
At any rate, all these people live here very much like other people and no more than two or three percent at the most are intimately concerned with those political and social activities which are the prime interest of the Washington folks who break into the newspapers. The people of Washington work, play golf, cook, go shopping in big stores, kill each other, love each other, inhabit apartments large or tiny, dance, go to church, drink, have babies, buy groceries, get sick, motor and worry. They can't vote, but hardly anyone cares.

Continual proximity to the workings of weighty national affairs seems only to intensify their interest in local happenings. A good murder case here sends newspaper circulation zooming as nothing else could do short of a presidential death or the cave-in of the Capitol dome. Base as it is to international relations and domestic problems, the populace seems rather a credulous one. Clairvoyants and fortune-tellers do a surprising amount of business. Miss Elzina Howells has just been found guilty of swindling two nurses of $5000. She said she got tips on the stock market from the stars and they let her invest their money.

All sorts of little things of local interest happen. . . . Nine colored boys, aged 11 to 17, have been arrested for the theft of 60 automobiles in three months. They called themselves the "Cat-o'-Nine Tails Gang."

The Senate or House District of Columbia Committee is always investigating some local matter or other—most lately mortgage frauds. . . . Mr. Paul Browning is accused of a unique murder attempt; his wife says he forced poison down her throat and she may die. . . . Mrs. Emily Birch tried to run away from home with the family car and two children and when her husband tried to stop her the car crashed him against the garage wall. . . . Fire departments of all nearby towns have been invited to the eighth annual firemen's parade.

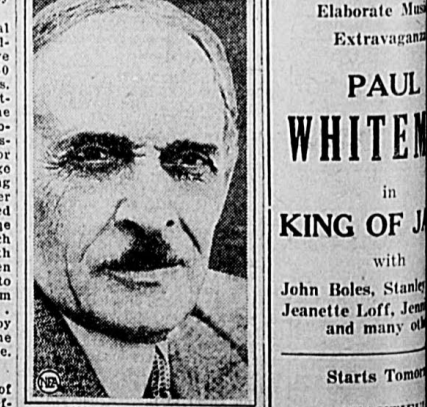

And They Have Taxes, Too
The present local tax rate of $1.70 per $100 will remain in effect for another year. . . . The Girl's Club of the Neighborhood House has been holding rehearsals for some of Aesop's Fables. . . . A prominent speakery proprietor was rebuked by a cop when his truck full of empty beer kegs blocked an alley and is now on a bill charged with trying to give the cop a $10 bill.
