SHALL THE PRESS BE MUZZLED?

Are the people of the United States entitled to know the truth about public business?

Are the rank and file of our citizenship, who pay the taxes in time of peace and who fight the battles in time of war, to be kept in the dark about the doings of the members of the United States senate whose salaries are paid by the people?

Shall a gag be placed upon the free press of America?

These are the questions that are involved in the barring from the floor of the United States senate of Paul Mallon, representative of the United Press, because he printed the way the senators voted on the confirmation of Lenroot.

Mallon had a right to get this information and he had a right to print it.

The senate of the United States has no right to censor the press of this nation. The newspapers are the judges of what they will print—and not the senate. Once let the precedent be established that a majority of the senate can say what shall and what shall not go into the columns of the press, and all bars are down.

Millions upon millions of citizens depend upon the United Press for news of what is happening in Washington and throughout the world. An attempt to discipline the United Press is a blow to the hosts of readers who rely upon the "U. P." for their information. And that they rely rightly upon that organization is shown in the present instance, which manifests the enterprise and zeal of the corps of the United Press. And no matter what action the senate may take, the United Press will continue to get the news.

In fact, newspapers who use other news services and who took occasion to "ban" on the barring of the United Press representative from the floor of the senate did not feature the significant fact that all press representatives have been so barred. This is not the battle of an individual nor of a single news association. It is a fight in which the rights of all newspapers are on the same side and those rights are involved whether they will or no.

The history of America is filled with instances where one man or a set of men have sought to interfere with the press. And history records the story of the downfall that those meddlers came to in the end.

The senate says that the vote should have been kept secret. That is a senate rule and may be binding upon members of the senate but not upon anyone else.

Are those aggrieved senators ashamed of the way they voted or afraid of the people to know how they cast their vote? If so, they should resign and let the positions be filled by fearless men who vote their conviction.

TRUCK USED BY ROBBERS RECOVERED

Two Tires Missing; Truck Was Stolen by Fleeing Men.

RANGER, Texas, May 24.—The truck stolen by yeggs Tuesday night to escape from Ranger, after they had been surprised while robbing the Ranger Iron & Metal company, has been recovered. The truck, which belonged to the Lone Star Gas company, was found in a pasture near the Staff highway, about three miles south of Ranger, the police department stated. Two tires were missing from the truck.

The tires are all the thieves have to show for a very exciting evening which they started off by stealing a truck in Eastland, coming to Ranger, where they were in the act of loading the truck with sacks of brass and copper when they encountered a night watchman and they fled on foot after one of the burglars had thrown a piece of iron at the watchman and he had then fired several times. Soon afterward, they stole the Lone Star truck.

With the recovery of the first truck, which was abandoned at the scene of the attempted robbery of the metal company's warehouse and with the second truck recovered, all property is back in the hands of the owners, with the exception of the two tires from the Lone Star truck.

Family Menu

BY SISTER MARY

At this season of the year, the tang of horseradish has an excellent tonic effect. Horseradish with roast beef is a time honored combination, but a touch of this same pungent root with equal adds much to the milder flavored meat. Many vegetables gain interest by the addition of a small quantity of horseradish in the seasoning. Baked and broiled fish are improved if served with a horseradish sauce. The sauce may be hot or cold as preferred. Horseradish cream has some food value in its sauce and adds about 125 calories to the meal in which it is served.

Horseradish Cream

Two cups cream, 2 tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons flour, 1/4 cup grated horseradish, 2 tablespoons vinegar, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/4 teaspoon pepper, 1 teaspoon sugar. Melt butter, stir in flour and when perfectly blended, slowly add cream, stirring constantly. Cook two or three minutes after all the cream is added. Add remaining ingredients and keep hot over hot water but do not let boil. Prepared horseradish can be used. Four tablespoons prepared horseradish are needed. The sauce is good with roast beef or boiled fish. Horseradish butter is exceptionally good with broiled fish. On the "lean" varieties such as cod, haddock or halibut is desired.

Horseradish Butter

One-half cup butter, 2 tablespoons grated horseradish, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon sugar. Mix horseradish, salt, sugar and lemon juice. There should be enough lemon juice to make the horseradish moist but not thin. Work butter with a fork until creamy. Beat in horseradish mixture and continue beating until thick and white. Where Lindy and Anne May Be Married

It is amid these quiet scenes on North Haven Island, Maine, that Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh and Anne Morrow will be wed in June, according to reports. Plans to hold the wedding on the isolated estate of Ambassador Dwight Morrow, Anne's father, are believed to have found favor with the famed flyer and his bride-to-be. The courtyard and southwestern "L" of the new Colonial cottage on the estate are pictured upper left. And in such a simple, white-walled Colonial room as that shown lower right that the actual ceremony may take place; note the attractive fireplace (there is one in every room) and the old-fashioned clock on the mantle. Lower left is the pier on the island where steamers dock weekly and at which the Morrow family and their guests would arrive for the wedding. It will be a happy day for little Dorothy and Erma Grant, upper right, daughters of Herbert Grant, caretaker of the estate and friend of the Morrows, if they are privileged to witness the wedding.

Are You Run Down, Weak, Nervous?

To have plenty of firm flesh and the ability to do a big day's work and feel "like a two-year old" at night, you must eat three good meals a day, relish your food and properly digest it. If you can't eat, can't sleep, can't work, just take a teaspoonful of Tanlac before meals.

Mr. Joseph A. Culver, of 812 S. Main St., Muskogee, Okla., says: "I was a nervous wreck and forced myself to work and eat. I felt like quitting work before the day was up. On taking Tanlac, my appetite picked up so I could eat anything, soon sleep well and gained 10 lbs."

Tanlac is wonderful for indigestion and constipation—gas, pains, nausea, dizziness and headaches. It brings back lost appetite, helps you digest your food, and gain strength and weight. It contains no mineral drugs; it is made of roots, barks and herbs, nature's own medicines for the sick. The cost is less than 2 cents a dose. Get a bottle from your druggist. Your money back if it doesn't help.

Churches

May 26, mass will be at 10 a. m., Rev. P. Ruano. This is the first Sunday after Pentecost and it is also Trinity Sunday. The gospel of today is from the Gospel of St. Matthew XXVIII. 18-20 and is as follows: All power is given to me in heaven and on earth. Going, therefore, teach ye all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them in the name to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and, behold, I am with you all days even to the consummation of the world.

Jesus spoke these words to His apostles after his resurrection, probably on Mount Olivet, shortly before his ascension into heaven. They are certainly very remarkable, for they are among the last that He spoke on earth, and in them He gave his apostles commissions and promised them His perpetual assistance. The Church reads this gospel for the Trinity, because in it there is mention made of the three divine persons, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. This is the form the church uses when baptizing—saying while pouring water on the head of the person to be baptized—I baptize you in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. It is essential for the validity of baptism that words be pronounced at the same time as the water is poured on the head of the person; otherwise the baptism is considered doubtful or useless. In case of those who are dipped bodily and completely in the water the words of baptism must be pronounced while the party is under the water. Baptism by sprinkling is not considered a valid baptism. Rev. M. Collins.

Whiteley and wife, Eulalia Hendrick Whiteley, and H. G. Hendrick, are defendants, and the cause of action being alleged as follows:

FIRST COURT
Plaintiff sues in trespass to try title and for the possession of a tract of about 121.5 acres of land out of the Mary Fury Survey Abst. No. 126 in Eastland County, Texas, and described as follows:
Beginning at the S. E. corner of the J. M. Crisman Pre-emption survey which is also the S. W. corner of said Mary Fury Survey; Thence East 116 yeras; Thence North 366 yras.; Thence West 74 yras.; Thence North 277 yras.; Thence West about 1116 yras.; Thence South 643 yras. to the place of beginning.
Plaintiff alleges that on the 1st day of January, 1929, he was lawfully seized and possessed of the fee simple title to the surface rights interest in and to the above described tract of land and that on said day and year the Defendants J. H. Ferguson, Mrs. Mattie E. Cliatt and husband, W. T. Cliatt, and Mrs. M. M. Finley and J. G. Finley and the unknown heirs of J. P. McClarney, deceased, and Sam McClarney, John McClarney, Tom McClarney, and Maggie McClarney, and their unknown heirs, unlawfully entered upon said premises and ejected plaintiff therefrom and unlawfully withheld from him the possession thereof to his damage of $5,000.00 and that the reasonable rental value of said land and premises is $1,000.00.
Plaintiff prays for judgment for

MRS. LULA E. PETERSON
"An inactive liver caused me to be constipated and I was continually taking laxatives. I had many a restless night from all this suffering and would be as tired in the mornings as though I had never gone to bed. Nothing I took helped me.
"Sargon made me feel like a different woman. My appetite has come back and I enjoy my meals. My stomach is soothed and my digestion improved so I don't suffer bad effects after eating. The rheumatism disappeared and I rest much better at night. I get up in the morning feeling refreshed and full of life and energy.
"Sargon Soft Mass Pills toned up my liver and rid me of constipation in a natural manner. My whole system is reconditioned and filled with new health.
"Sargon has helped me so remarkably that I am preaching to all my friends about its benefits and will continue to praise this wonderful medicine every chance I get."
The above statement was made recently by Mrs. Lula E. Peterson, highly respected resident of 7814 Sherman St., Houston. Mrs. Peterson is a member of the Royal Neighbors society and also belongs to the Baptist church.

the title to and possession of the surface rights in and to said land and for rents and damages.
SECOND COURT
Plaintiff alleges that should the Court find that he is not entitled to recover on his first count and as prayed for therein, then he respectfully shows to the court:
(1)
That on or about the 18th day of October, 1928, he purchased from the Defendants, T. S. Whiteley and wife, their general warranty deed, all surface rights in and to the above described tract of land and were lying upon the warranty set out in said deed and in good faith and in due time attempted to enter upon and take possession of said land, but that the Defendants, J. H. Ferguson, Mrs. Mattie E. Cliatt, and Mrs. M. M. Finley, who were then in the possession of the land and premises or a part thereof, refused to permit plaintiff to enter into possession of the same, claiming to be the owners thereof or a part thereof. And this plaintiff does not know the full nature of their demands which, however, are a cloud upon his title to said land.
Plaintiff further alleges that in the event the court should find that said defendants, or either of them, are the owners of any part of said tracts of land, then this plaintiff should have his judgment over against the defendants, T. S. Whiteley and wife for the value of the acreage, so decreed to such other defendants, calculated on the basis of $15.50 per acre, the purchase price paid by plaintiff to the defendant, T. S. Whiteley for said land. And this plaintiff should be credited upon the deferred consideration evidenced by notes made by plaintiff to T. S. Whiteley and which are alleged to have been assigned by Whiteley to the defendant, H. G. Hendrick who holds the same for the use and benefit of said Whiteley.
This plaintiff prays in the alternative that should the court find that said defendants, or either of them, are the owners of any part of said land sold to him by defendants, Whiteley and wife, by their general warranty deed, that he then have his judgment over against the said defendants, T. S. Whiteley and wife for an amount equal to the acreage calculated on the basis of $15.50 per acre, on the agreed purchase price paid to said Whiteley for such acreage. And that said sum be credited upon the outstanding vendor's lien notes against said land and executed by this plaintiff.
Herein fail not, but have you before said Court, on said first day of the next term thereof, this writ, with your return thereon, showing how you have executed the same.
Witness my hand and official seal at my office in Eastland, Texas, this 3rd day of May, A. D., 1929.

Baker Tells of Big Change
Abilene Man Says Wife Has Suffered For Last 7 Years With Stomach Trouble, Was Losing Weight, Praises Orgatone.
"My wife's wonderful improvement is due to Orgatone," said J. E. Baker, living on Rural Route 3, Abilene, Texas.
"For the last seven years my wife has suffered something awful with stomach trouble. Everything she ate would upset her, she would suffer from indigestion and would have pains and cramps. She was very bilious and dizzy most all the time and was gradually growing weaker every day. She was badly constipated and had headaches and pains in her back. She was losing weight and strength and she was in a very bad condition.

"She has tried every kind of stomach medicine but nothing did her any good until we read other the only medicine she has ever taken that did her any good and she says that she wouldn't be without it. I am glad of the opportunity to tell the public what Orgatone has done for my wife."
Genuine Orgatone is not a so-called patent or secret remedy but a new scientific bile preparatory and is sold in Eastland exclusively by Tombs & Richardson, phone 233, who are the direct laboratory agents. (Adv.)

THIS HAS HAPPENED

NAN CARROLL is secretary to attorney JOHN CURTIS MORGAN. In the present case is the defense of the former telephone operator of a fashionable country club who has been indicted for blackmailing club members. Nan with a quick, logical mind, is able to make valuable suggestions which Morgan incorporates in his plans for the defense.

While they are working, IRIS MORGAN, haughty and beautiful wife of John Curtis Morgan, enters the office accompanied by little CURTIS MORGAN. She peevishly demands a large check for a shopping expedition, and at last departs, leaving Nan to act as nursemaid to little Curtis.

Nan bitterly resents being thus treated as a menial. At 5:30, when WILLIS TODD calls Nan to go to dinner with him, she is almost hysterical from the afternoon's strain. After dinner they go to Nan's small apartment where for the first time, Willis proposes marriage to her. She tells him that she is almost ready to take her bar examination and that she cannot give up her career for marriage. When Willis accuses Morgan of selfishly overworking Nan, she flies angrily to the defense of her employer.

Willis, stung to the quick by her defense of Morgan, tells her she is in love with Morgan and that it is he who has come between them. Nan blanches at his accusation. To save her life she cannot tell Willis it is a lie. When he leaves her, she is desperately lonely, afraid, stunned by the force of the discovery she has made about herself.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

For a long minute Nan Carroll crouched stricken against the door which had closed upon Willis Todd. Then the necessity for action drove her in a frenzy about the room. She swept the cushions from the couch into a big arm chair; tore off the cretonne cover and folded it with none of the loving care and pride which was the usual portion of the pretty thing; turned back the pale yellow, fluffy blanket and the hemstitched sheet; raced to her clothes closet and returned, sobbing, with pillow, nightdress, negligee and slippers.

"Willis Todd's crazy—crazy with jealousy!" she panted, still in that husky, terrified whisper with which she had tried to call him back. "But I won't think about it! I won't!" she repudiated the subject furiously as she ran to her dressing table and began to undress.

She scurried, as if pursued by devils, into the tiny bathroom, turned on the hot water, and while the tub filled cleaned her face of makeup, savagely massaged it with two-dollar-a-box "skin brush" brushed her teeth as violently as if she bore a grudge against their white-bleaming regularity.

When the tub was full of unbearably hot water, Nan shed her small body in it and allowed herself a moment of untroubled relaxation. "I won't think about it! I won't think about it!" she told herself again and again. "I won't think about it! I won't think about it!"

When at last she was ready for bed, she slipped on her nightgown, turned on the light, and looked at her reflection in the mirror. "What a pesty little thing!" she thought. "I wish I was not so fat!"

"What a pesty little thing!" she thought. "I wish I was not so fat!"

"What a pesty little thing!" she thought. "I wish I was not so fat!"

"What a pesty little thing!" she thought. "I wish I was not so fat!"

"What a pesty little thing!" she thought. "I wish I was not so fat!"

"What a pesty little thing!" she thought. "I wish I was not so fat!"

"What a pesty little thing!" she thought. "I wish I was not so fat!"

shorn of his courtroom dignity and austerity?

A tiny voice deep within her heart whispered: "You framed it and left it before you these two years because it shows you and him together. Silly girl! Didn't you know?"

"It's not true!" Nan denied hotly. "I'll tear the thing up—see!" But her fingers refused to obey her. Sobbing, she thrust the framed picture into a little drawer of the secretary, jerked out the light and ran back to bed. She had forgotten the cream bottle and the dairyman's bill.

She made no further pretense then; did not open the heavy book on criminal law; jerked the chain of her bedside lamp and crushed her face into her pillow, to intensify the darkness. For shame had claimed her for its own.

"In love with a married man!" The ugly phrase leaped at her in the darkness, and other ugly phrases, which had only waited for darkness, came hurtling after it. There was a queer comfort in letting the ugly things claw at her, for the very pain and disgust kept her from complete realization. But when the unequal battle was over and her head bathed in the tepid water, she found that not so easily was she to be let off. The love at which the arrows had been so savagely thrust was still alive in her heart, amazingly alive and growing with every moment, now that its existence had been acknowledged.

"This can't be me!" She struck her breast sharply, as if to kill the thing that was growing so rapidly in her heart. "Not Nan Carroll! Why, I'm proud! I'm honorable! I've always been as square as a man, Nan Carroll simply can't be in love with another woman's husband—but, oh, I am, I am! Not with Iris Morgan's husband—no, no! She makes him silly and small, calls him jack—no, no! I don't love HIM! It's my own John Curtis Morgan that I love, the John Curtis Morgan I've helped to make the man nobody knows but me."

"Is it such a sin to love him when I helped make him?" She doesn't know him at all—my John Curtis Morgan. Three years—three years—and all this time I've been loving him and didn't know it!"

And then, because she couldn't help herself, she thought back over those three years in the new light of knowledge that had been forced upon her tonight. She saw herself again as she had been then—a deadly serious, high-minded girl of 21, just graduated from the state university, where she had learned stenography along with more lofty academic subjects.

A thin little girl, brown eyes shadowed with grief over her father's death, long brown hair wrapped in heavy braids about her small head, a Phi Beta Kappa key shamefacedly hidden away in her trunk along with her diploma. The dean himself had given her a letter of introduction to Morgan, who was just beginning to add luster to the university as district attorney of the state's largest city.

Since she was an alumna of his own university, Morgan had treated her with grave respect and friendliness from the very first; had quickly made a place for her in his office as a typist, and then, within three months, had promoted her to the post of private secretary to himself.

"I must have been in love with him even then," she whispered against her pillow. "What a pesty little thing! I was not to know it! Did I—show it? Do I show it now?" The thought struck her with such sharp new terror that her sobs were stifled in her throat. Shame made her body burn so hotly that she tossed off the blanket.

"And I prided myself so on my interest in law!" she gaped at herself mercilessly. "Worked like a slave, worked till all hours of the night—because I was so interested in my work! Fool! Fool! Running after him all that time, and didn't have sense enough to know it! Hoping he'd pat you on the head and tell you you were a nice little girl, to work so hard! Hoping he'd stay at night and work, too—just you and he! Oh, oh!"

The worm turned then, however. Her self-respect reared its bruised head. "You may have been in love with him all this time, Nan Carroll, but you loved your work for its own sake, too. You worked until all hours of the night, not just to please him, but because you were vitally interested, because there was work to be done and you'd rather die than shirk. Don't make yourself out worse than you are."

"But that's bad, bad!" Nan's shame answered her self-respect. "I've always despised girls who made sentimental fools of themselves over their bosses. And now I'm worse than the worst of them. I love him so terribly that I'd die happy if he would kiss me just once—as he kisses HER."

And then she would have given anything to banish the picture which her last words brought up: Iris Morgan, arrogant, beautiful Iris, casually, even boredly accepting Morgan's passionate adoration. During three years of necessarily intimate contact at the lawyer's private secretary, Nan had been forced to witness Morgan kissing his wife on a number of occasions—leave-takings, arrivals from journeys, and, occasionally, kisses for which there was no extraordinary occasion, except that the man's overwhelming love for his wife made him forget that an office was no place for the demonstration of passion, even though it was marital.

"Why didn't I realize every time I saw him kiss her that I would have given my life to be in her place?" the girl marveled in her misery. "I thought I flinched because I hate her, because she's unworthy of him, but it was because I was jealous! Jealous of a man's love for his wife!" she taunted herself, taking a cruel satisfaction in hurting herself.

"Probably she's all right, and I'm the one that's been all wrong. Maybe she's fine and sweet and gracious, and I've been unable to see her clearly because of my jealousy. But no, no! She isn't good! She's mean and cruel and selfish! She takes everything from him and gives him nothing not even respect. She despises him because he loves her so abjectly, but she doesn't hesitate to take advantage of his fame and his big fees. But—his hers. And he loves her. Oh, what am I going to do! Oh, dear God, what am I going to do?"

But even now her heart was torn with the question she knew the answer. Shivering, she drew up the blanket and her resolution at the same time: "I'll have to resign. I can't stay on—now that I know I—I couldn't bear it. Just another stenographer in love with her boss!"

Then, because her resolution was so firmly made, she permitted herself one indulgence: "Will you miss me, my darling? Oh, John Curtis Morgan, I love you so!"

CHAPTER IV
Nan Carroll rose the next morning so weighted with trouble and the fatigue of an almost sleepless night that she was astonished to find that her bathroom scales, upon which she stepped from force of habit as soon as she had dried her body after a cold shower, registered 107 pounds.

"Lost a pound," she reflected with melancholy pleasure. "And since I forgot to set out the cream bottle after all, and haven't a trace of appetite anyway, I'll probably lose another pound by tomorrow morning. It seems— and she made a bravely humorous face at herself in the bathroom mirror—"that unrequited love has its compensation."

She breakfasted on two thin triangles of toast, made on the electric toaster which Willis had given her when she had taken the small apartment a year before, and sipped scalding-hot black coffee with faint regret for the missing cream. For the first time since she had been its mistress she tidied up the miniature kitchenette without congratulating herself that it was hers.

"Looks like rain," she discovered, parting the gold silk marquisette curtains that shrouded her big double front window. "It must say it's nice of the weather to be sympathetic. Black lizard-skin pumps—doesn't hurt them to get wet; gun metal stockings—if there's a runner in them I'll sit right down and howl; my dark blue crepe de chine—wish I had a BLACK to suit my mood!" she told herself with bitter humor as she laid out her clothes.

When she was completely dressed she surveyed her reflection with wry dissatisfaction. Disgustedly she jerked on her rainy-day coat, snatched her umbrella from the closet and hurried away toward the hardest task she had ever set herself in her life.

As she swayed by a strap in the trolley car, her eyes fixed unseeingly upon the morning paper she rehearsed her speech of resignation.

"Oh, Mr. Morgan, can you spare a minute? I'm awfully sorry, but I've decided to leave. Yes, sir, Saturday week, if you can get someone to take my place by then. Of course I'll be glad to help train a new girl."

But that was silly, she knew. John Curtis Morgan would never let her reach that point uninterupted. As she listened, in imagination, to his amazed protests, color glowed richly in her cheeks. Then shame jerked her up short.

"I do believe, Nan Carroll, you're looking forward to resigning just to hear him beg you to stay! You'll write him a nice, formal note, you will, and you'll tell him a whopping big lie about having accepted a better position—more money, greater opportunity, larger city. Make it very formal and final, so he won't have the nerve to ask you to stay."

"Oh, but I can't slap him in the face like that!" Nan's heart protested. "We've been such good friends. I'd destroy some of his beautiful faith in human nature if I repaid all his kindness and friendship like that!"

"There's no other way," her common sense scolded her heart. "You can't say: 'Please, Mr. Morgan, I'm very sorry, but I've just discovered that I'm in love with you, and since you're married I'd better leave today.' Of course," she mused, as the car clanged down Main street, "I could tell him a temporary lie—tell him I'm leaving to be married to Willis Todd, then tell Willis that I love him, not John Curtis Morgan, and be safely married to Willis within a week."

"Day-dreaming, Miss Carroll?" A business man who had offices in her building touched her arm. "Here's our corner."

Five minutes later she was fitting her key into the lock of the door labeled "Suite 709, John Curtis Morgan, Attorney-at-Law." HER key, HER office, HER boss!—and soon to be hers no longer. She could scarcely see the familiar room for tears as she sprung the lock and closed the door gently. The floor beneath the letter drop in the door was littered with early mail and she stooped to pick it up.

Ten minutes of nine. Evans, the clerk, and young Blake, the lawyer on salary, had not arrived, of course, but for once she was not contemptuous. They did not love the place as she did. Why should they? Morgan was only an employer to them, a source of income but also of hard work. Suddenly Nan envied those two absent men with all her heart. They could stay on and on, see him every day, serve him, share humbly in his triumphs, while she who loved him—

"I won't cry!" she told herself fiercely, as she slit envelopes and extracted their contents—bills, court notices, crackling legal documents, letters, advertising circulars. "I've simply got to remember that I'm darned lucky to have had two years with him before I realized I was making a fool of myself. And that he's the kind of man he is, instead of a rotter who would be tickled to death to make love to his secretary behind his wife's back."

"I must say I have good taste in love," she congratulated herself with the bitter humor that had been born in her heart the night before. "Even if I told him I was in love with him I could stay right on here until I was old and gray and he'd never take the slightest advantage of my love. I couldn't love him so much if I wasn't sure of that. . . . Oh-h-h-h! What in the world—"

Jerked out of self-pity and into temporary forgetfulness, Nan stared incredulously at the single-sheet letter she had just drawn from a plain cheap envelope. Her eyes, which had glanced mechanically down the sheet, went back to the beginning of the message:

"J. C. Morgan, Esq.," it began oddly, in small, neatly printed letters, calculated to baffle a handwriting expert. "If you value your peace of mind you'd better lay off certain witnesses you subpoenaed last night in the Grace Cox case. Stick to Grace's friends and let her enemies alone, or you may stir up a nest of hornets that will sting YOU for your pains."

The bald threat was signed ironically, "A Friend," but the real significance of the message lay in the message lay in the postscript: "P. S.—Do you know where and with whom your wife was on the night of September 11? There are ways of getting this highly interesting information into the court record—if necessary."

Nan's first emotion when she had reread the blackmailing letter was furious anger against its writer. How did anyone dare to try so contemptibly to influence John Curtis Morgan to "throw" a trial? Didn't the fool-writer have sense enough to know that Morgan would use this letter as an additional weapon in his fight for Grace Cox's vindication? Imagine trying to blackmail John Curtis Morgan, the most fearless, the most upright man in the world! It was easy to picture his righteous wrath—

But in picturing John Curtis Morgan as he would look when he read the vile thing, Nan saw him reading that postscript, that nasty insinuation which was even now crawling about in her own mind, never-to-be-forgotten. Of course Morgan would snap his fingers at the insinuation to a villainous fool's obvious effort to frighten him. But—he would have read it, and he would not forget it. The words would rankle deep in his mind. It would hurt him more than he would ever admit that an anonymous writer had dared sully his wife's name.

No, no! She picked up the letter, folded it with the tips of her fingers as if she were afraid of being poisoned; thrust it hastily into her handbag. He would not see it, she vowed, her mouth and eyes grim. For two years she had served him in big and little ways, sparing him every possible unpleasantness. Just because she now knew she loved him, why should she stop serving him?

But a sudden thought made her hand quiver on the clasp of her bag: was she truly serving him in keeping this anonymous threat from reaching him? What if there was an ugly truth behind the sinister threat in that postscript? September 11—September 11—Nan knit her brows, then swiftly turned back the loose leaves of her daily calendar.

Yes! On September 11 Morgan

had been out of town—Chicago! She remembered now, remembered how surprised she had been that Iris Morgan had not accompanied her husband as she invariably did when he went to the larger city on business. Morgan had been surprised, too—and hurt. Nan had heard him pleading with her over the telephone, offering gifts, dinner parties, shows—

CLASS MEETING POSTPONED

On account of the threatening weather of yesterday afternoon, the Susan Steele Bible class cancelled their outing and picnic arrangements and will hold the meeting at some future date.

MASSED CHOIRS ACTIVELY REHEARSING

The choirs of the Eastland churches which have been massed for the musical program to be given Sunday evening at the high school auditorium, on the occasion of the baccalaureate sermon, are doing some wonderfully effective work under the direction of the talented Wilda Drago-Caton, and pianist, Mrs. Charles G. Norton.

Rehearsals have been held each night for some time, and the ensemble result promises smooth and beautiful performance.

Of a special beauty is the anthem, "Hold Thou My Hand," rendered by a chorus of over 100 voices. The Drago Ensemble will form a special attraction on the program.

Helen Goes to Meet the Queen

This photo shows Helen Wills, comely queen of American tennis, arrayed in her court dress and on her way to Buckingham Palace, where she was presented at court. You see her here as, the cynosure of hundreds of eyes, she left the American Women's Club in London for the royal ceremony. She is wearing a classically simple gown of ivory white satin, the waist outlined with tiny tucks and the back cut in a V. Her jewelry consists of a single strand of pearl beads, earrings of large and small pearls and a single ring. The hand which usually carries a tennis racket here bears a huge fan of ostrich tips.
