

War Succeeds In Getting The Tax Assessor "Up a Tree", People Couldn't

AUSTIN, Tex.—The war has succeeded where the common folks have failed plenty of times—in getting that tax assessor "up a tree" about property valuations.

It really isn't a joking matter, though recently declared Aldo Jenks, acting director of the University of Texas Bureau of Municipal Research. The present plight of local tax assessors is going to work plenty of hardships on a municipal and state government, he predicted.

"It may seem like a foretaste of paradise to have the assessor lower the evaluation of that vacant lot you've been trying to get rid of for years," Jenks explained. "It may seem even better to think about the assessor not having any trees for his automobile and being unable to look your property over for himself before accepting your personal evaluation."

But these "blessings" to the tax payers will mean lower revenues for municipal and state governments, which during wartime are called upon for expenditures equal to, and possibly greater than, those of peacetime, Jenks pointed out.

"Real estate valuations—and most local tax money comes from real property taxes—are the biggest problem," Jenks said. Automobile display rooms and warehouses are the best examples of property which must be re-assessed in view of war conditions, since most such buildings are now vacant and therefore producing no revenue for the owner."

It doesn't help the assessor any to realize that values are changing faster than he can keep up with them, either, Jenks said.

And then there's the matter of tire rationing. The tax assessor is not favored with a priority rating. He can't get new tires or retreads. Just like everybody else, he must conserve his tires.

"That may sound like good news for property owners in the back country," Jenks commented. Who's going to waste precious rubber driving out to look at your sandhill farm to determine its real value?"

As federal taxes rise by leaps and bounds, pressure will be exerted to force the citizen to pay those levies, Jenks declared. That means that most people are going to try to economize and local tax bills may be the opportunity they're looking for.

"But we might as well remember," Jenks asserted, "that economizing on local tax bills—lowering the property evaluations we submit and failing to pay taxes on time and in full—will mean economizing on local government services and expenditures."

The "tax" is likely to fall first on the various welfare agencies of city, county and state government, the municipal expert predicted.

"In fact," Jenks concluded, "if the tax assessor is 'up a tree' over all his new problems, it looks very much as though the citizens of his community were right there with him."

Sarah Elizabeth Bollinger Passes At Age of 84 Years

Mrs. D. B. Bollinger, 84, mother of Mrs. T. E. Payne of Eastland, and an Eastland County pioneer, died at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Payne early Sunday morning following an illness of several weeks duration. Funeral services were conducted late Sunday from the Hamner Funeral Home in Eastland by Rev. Franklin Swanner, pastor of the Eastland Baptist Church, followed by interment in the old Bollinger cemetery near Staff.

Bearers were: Loss Woods, John Bishop, John White, John Hamilton, Ernest Wood, and Ed T. Cox.

From Sarah Elizabeth Clubb, daughter of Abraham and Hannah Clubb, in Bollinger county, Missouri, September 26, 1858, the legend grew to womanhood and was married there to David Ben Bollinger, to which union eleven children were born eight of whom survive and are as follows: Mrs. Emma Dick, Fort Worth; Mrs. T. E. Payne, Eastland; B. M. Bollinger, Waco; B. V. Bollinger, Marshall; Dr. E. A. Bollinger, Austin; Mrs. Texie Betters, Houston; Dewey Bollinger of New Braunfels; and Ivey Bollinger of Spring Branch.

Both being of hardy pioneer stock, Mr. Bollinger and his wife, soon after their marriage, set out for Texas to carve for themselves a name and place in the West. They settled in Eastland county near what is now Staff, in 1877, when there were but few established communities in the county. Here they developed the Bollinger ranch, known far and wide as the home of fine horses, cattle and other livestock. They resided here until 1905, when compelled by the pioneer spirit, they disposed of their Eastland county holdings and went to the State of Chihuahua, Old Mexico, where in true pioneer spirit, they purchased ranching lands and began the work of gain building a home.

They continued their pioneering here until compelled by the approaching Mexican Revolution, to abandon their property and make their way back to Texas. They were among the last of the settlers leaving the State of Chihuahua.

After returning from Old Mexico, Mr. and Mrs. Bollinger ranch in Southwest Texas until, in their declining years, memories of their younger days in Eastland County influenced them to return here where they had many friends to make their home and final resting place, Mr. Bollinger, active until a short time before his death died last February. Mrs. Bollinger lived one day past her 84th birthday.

4,500,000 Lbs Of Fat Salvaged By Housewives

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Out of the frying pans of patriotic American women came enough waste fats during July, August and the first week of September to provide the glycerin for 11,300,000 anti-aircraft shells.

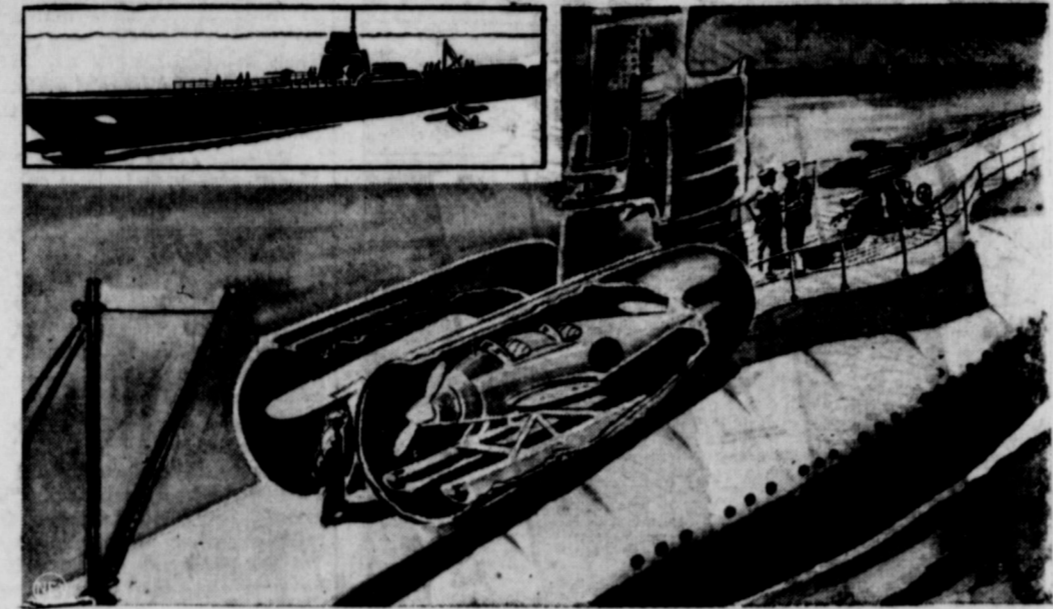

First reports on the nationwide campaign to salvage waste fats necessary in the manufacture of explosives, released here today by the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, indicate that American housewives have turned in approximately 4,500,000 pounds of this vital material during the first nine weeks of the drive.

The food chain based this estimate on collections in its own stores which amounted to 362,000 pounds during this period. "The response to the government's appeal has been excellent thus far," the report said, "but many more housewives must take part in the campaign if the goal of 500,000,000 pounds is achieved."

Starting with a total of 104,000 pounds collected in July, when A & P opened the campaign simultaneously in all of its stores throughout the country, housewives have been turning in waste fats to company meat counters at a continually increasing rate as the campaign gained momentum, the report stated. In August collections nearly doubled the first month's total and the upswing continued with 55,000 pounds turned in during the first week in September.

Collections are expected to be swelled during the coming weeks as additional women are enlisted in the campaign through the promotional efforts of the Fat Salvage Committee and the War Production Board.

Hoarding Gasoline Will Be Dangerous Commissioner Says

AUSTIN, Tex.—Civic leaders in the promotion of fire prevention are facing a heavy handicap of increased hazards to overcome during Fire Prevention Week, October 4 to 10, declares Marvin Hall, State Fire Insurance Commissioner.

Innumerable fire hazards were created in a number of Texas cities last week when unfounded rumors, spreading at an almost unbelievable rate, told of proposals to impose gasoline rationing without notice. Citizens rushed to filling stations to buy gasoline and take it home in any type of container available.

"Every person in Texas who is hoarding gasoline has automatically voided fire insurance on his property," Commissioner Hall announced. "Persons foolishly trying to hoard a few gallons of gasoline have done three things: First, they have jeopardized their insurance. When gasoline comes into your home, your fire insurance policy goes out. Unless you have a special permit from your company, the policy simply says that gasoline is a more powerful explosive than dynamite and that 'I will not stand guard over a house where gasoline is stored—even a small amount'. Your policy literally says this in different words, but that is what it means."

"Second they endanger the present low insurance rates of Texas—the lowest of all time. Losses affect all insurance rates, and if excessive dwelling fires are caused by careless hoarding of gasoline, then the recent 25 per cent reduction on residence rates could easily be wiped out.

"Third, they also jeopardize their lives and the lives of all members of their families when gasoline is stored on the premises. Gasoline fires are already responsible for the loss of too many lives in this state. During August gasoline caused seven of the 16 fire deaths in Texas.

"Too few people realize that just pouring gasoline from one container to another very frequently generates static electricity that will cause an explosion of gasoline vapor. Gasoline has more explosive power by volume than dynamite. None of us would think of keeping 100 pounds of dynamite in the home—that would be too dangerous. Yet, a gallon of gasoline has about the same explosive power as is contained in 100 pounds of dynamite.

"We need at this time to use a lot of common sense and reason. History has never recorded a time when fire prevention was of greater importance than it is today. Fire prevention is needed, not for just a few days or a week, but every day in the year. It is foolish to throw safety and protection aside by taking undue risks with gasoline."

Texas standard fire policies, the Commissioner points out, clearly states that insurance is void if gasoline is stored on the premises unless a permit is obtained from the insurance company. The company doesn't have to serve the policy holder with any kind of notice.

"Should a fire result from stored gasoline," Hall said, "the property owner could not collect any insurance if the company had not granted permission for gasoline storage, regardless of the quantity on hand."

ACTION UPON PRICE BILL BEING URGED

By United Press
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 29.—Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky told the Senate today that the country is "in impatient for action" on the farm price controversy and served notice that there would be no adjournment until the anti-inflation bill is passed.

Referring to complaints that President Roosevelt had "held a pistol at the head of Congress" by demanding action by October 1, under threat of curbing prices by presidential orders, Barkley told the Senate that the chief executive called attention to the need for legislative action on April 27, long before his Labor Day message.

Meat Should Be Handled Carefully Physician Warns

AUSTIN, Tex.—Because of the present emergency thousands of American families will be added this autumn to the many who are accustomed to the home-preparation and storage of meats for their own use. This is the opinion of Dr. Geo. W. Cox, State Health Officer, who has issued a timely warning against carelessness that might cause illness.

Trichinosis, Dr. Cox explained, is caused by a microscopic organism called the trichina or muscle worm. This parasite develops in the human body whenever infested pork is eaten, if it has not been sufficiently cooked. The young worms, known as larvae, are found in the muscles of infested pigs. When this type of meat is eaten raw or is undercooked, the larvae grow in the intestine into adult worms which are carried by the lymphatic tissue and blood stream to the muscles where they become encysted. This period of invasion gives rise to the symptoms of the disease. The severity of the illness is dependent upon the number of trichinae originally consumed.

"While the adult parasites are in the human intestines they may cause acute diarrhea," Dr. Cox said, "which at first can be mistaken for typhoid fever or dysentery. This may start anywhere from the first of the fourth day after eating the infested pork and may last one to several days. Later a puffiness of the eyes may appear together with various degrees of pain in the muscles, particularly those of the calf of the leg, the upper arm, the shoulder and the jaws."

Dr. Cox declared that since no treatment is known, prevention is very important. The worms cannot be seen by the unaided eye, so inspection of pork cannot be depended upon to protect from this type of infection. The only sure safeguard is to be certain that all pork and pork products are thoroughly cooked, whether at home or purchased. Many of the more serious and fatal cases have been traced to eating raw smoked sausages or raw pork eating.

Since it has been estimated that approximately five per cent of all swine are infested with trichinae it is being emphasized that the invariable rule before consuming pork or pork products is to see that it is cooked until all natural color is gone and no evidence of blood can be detected. This is the only safe rule to follow, according to the State Health Officer.

When Girl Marries Social Security Records Change

ABILENE, Tex.—In commenting on the heavy increase in the number of marriages within the last year, W. O. King, manager of the Abilene Social Security Board field office, said that many persons who have been issued social security account numbers have changed their names through marriage and have failed to notify the Social Security Board.

"It is essential that when a woman marries and changes her name, she notify the Board accordingly in order that we may make our records conform," Mr. King stated. "It thus prevents confusion and costly errors in recording her wages that could result if her employer reported her wages under her married name while the Board's records still showed her maiden name."

Any individual may apply at the Social Security Board office in the Alexander building for "a change in records" form but, he added, they should bring their account number cards with them. It is then possible to issue a new card immediately, showing the changed name under the same number. Women who apply for a "change in records" by mail should enclose the original card but should keep a record of the number until the new card is received.

Mr. King also emphasized that the employer should likewise be informed of the change so that the name reported by him will be the same as shown on the corrected account number card.

The reporting of such corrections and changes is necessary in order that the Social Security Board may maintain accurate records at all times to assure prompt payment of old-age and survivors insurance claims, according to Mr. King, who stated that there is no charge for the correction of such records.

Texas Farmers Are Receiving More Money Now

AUSTIN, Tex.—Texas farmers have already received 74 per cent more money from their 1942 crops than they did during the first two-thirds of 1941, Dr. F. A. Buechel, statistician for the University of Texas Bureau of Business Research, reports.

Agricultural income for the first eight months of 1942 has been $412,000,000 as compared with $237,000,000 during the like period a year ago, he estimates. During August, farm income totaled $78,000,000 compared with $30,000,000 in August a year ago and the average August income of $66,000,000 for the five-year period 1928-32.

"Cash income in the old cotton areas is noteworthy," he points out, "while the western areas are making great strides in all phases of the livestock including dairying and are thus building their agriculture on a solid foundation."

He estimated a 3,484,000-bale cotton crop, however, larger than any during the past four years, but considerably below the ten-year average for 1928-37 of 4,077,000 bales.

"From the standpoint of cash income, cotton and cottonseed no longer stand pre-eminent in total agricultural income," he declared, "but instead have yielded priority to livestock and livestock products. Since 1938 the income from livestock and livestock products have been well above that from cotton and cotton seed, and this means of gain promises to widen sharply in the future."

He cited that in 1927 cotton and cottonseed accounted for $594,900,000 of the state's total farm cash income of $760,695,000, while livestock and livestock products that year amounted to only $167,214,000. In 1941, on the other hand, the state's total agricultural income was $616,237,000, of which $285,560,000 came from livestock and livestock products, while only $250,380,000 came from cotton and cottonseed.

"It is extremely significant and fortunate that for the past several years emphasis in Texas agriculture has been placed upon the expansion of livestock and livestock products," he said. "Such products as meats, milk, dairy manufactured products and eggs will be required in growing amounts during coming months and years; whereas the problem of burdensome surpluses still prevails in such products as cotton, wheat, and corn."

Look Under the Surface

Don't be deceived by the detail which the Congressional banking and currency committees are writing into their anti-inflation bills. Look beneath the doodads and gewgaws and what do you find? Exactly. The buck is passed to the President.

The Senate version, which comes closer to having teeth would stabilize pay at the Sept. 15 level. At that time pay scales had risen so much above the August 1939, that buying power was up more than 25 per cent. The Senate proposes to peg it there.

Both Senate and House bills specifically give the President the power to make adjustments whenever in his opinion, inequities exist or the prosecution of the war will be aided by such changes.

This of course removes all onus from Congress, and places an anormous burden upon an already overworked President. It makes of the ostensible wage peg a futile gesture.

Moreover, both bills fix the ceiling upon the prices of farm products at parity. But parity is a mercurial concept. It changes almost hour by hour as the prices of the farmers' purchases change. And the cost of what the farmers buy is controlled by wage scales.

By his power to adjust wages the President is given complete authority to manipulate both wages and farm produce prices.

Therefore, although the committees have given the appearance of accepting their legislative burden, and fixing standards for the battle against inflation, in fact they have tossed the hot potato to the President.

There is much disagreement as to the formulae which should be applied to establish these ceilings. Some want them high, some want them low. Perhaps wage-earners should get 43 per cent more buying power now—when there is little to be bought—than they got in 1929, when our industrial plant was booming on civilian production. Let's waive that for the moment.

The important thing that Congress is abdicating. The legislative branch is ducking out and leaving the nasty task to the President.

Mr. Roosevelt may want the power, or may not. Surely he would appear to have enough work to do, as Commander-in-Chief of our armed forces and unofficial chairman of the board of directors of the United Nations, without this chore. Even that is immaterial.

Policy, we repeat, is Congress, province. It is to make national policy that we pay 531 representatives and 96 senators, provide them with excellent working quarters and ample staffs.

The Nazis Gain a Few Yards More

THE PAYOFF

BY HARRY GRAYSON
NEA Service Sports Editor

BELFAST sports writer lists things for natives to look for in baseball games between American soldier teams in northern Ireland:

1. The curve the pitcher can get on the ball as he throws it at high speed.
 2. The accuracy and speed of the throwing. Watch the catcher take a pitched ball behind the batter and throw it right across to second base to head off a runner trying for a stolen base.
 3. Sliding into base, the runner will rocket himself into the fielder stop to touch him with the ball when this is necessary to put the runner out.
- This might help the Brooklyn Dodgers.
- Ulster descriptions of games give you an idea of how baseball looks to a total stranger.
- "Each fielder wears a glove on the non-throwing hand, and nearly all catching is done with the gloved hand," it is pointed out.

DESCRIBING a "match" in Belfast between Kentucky doughboys and a club of men formerly stationed at Fort Sheridan, Ill., a native reporter reports:

"It is a real battle of giants, the burly players giving of their best to supply speed, thrills and surprises.

"The Wildcat (of the Kentucky team) is swinging the stick like a cop in the Bowery. He drops his bat as if it were electric-heated, and hares away to the big blob of whitewash which marks first base. He has reached the first milestone of the four that make up a run. The scoring's on the deferred payment system—by installments."

Speaking of a coach: "A fat, comfortable fellow in full kit. He's wandering up and down the field like a hen on a hot griddle. He tells the boys when to run and when not to. He's the brains of the outside edge."

CATCHER: "He's crouching on his hunkers, chest protector like a gigantic wasp's waistcoat, and the wired face guard like some Boris Karloff."

Stolen base: "The guy standing on first base slips off cutely and makes second base. A kind of leaps like a contortionist to catch the flying ball. If he'd got it first, the run-sneaking guy would have been out."

Retiring the side: "The first of the Kentuckians is struck out, missing his quota of three pitches. The second batter is run out, and the third also fails to impress."

Baseball has impressed the Irish, however, as American soldiers once more take the game into new territory.

YOU poor guys who aren't healthy enough to be an officer, but who qualify for limited service in the draft, are now permitted a slight respite for loud whoops and the clicking of heels. Because Army has just flashed a bright ray of hope, aimed directly at the I-B selective service classification.

Until very recently, no matter how much valuable experience and intelligence might seethe in one bulging cranium, if the owner's eyes didn't measure up to officer standards he was out of luck so far as an eventual commission was concerned.

Selective service, however, wasn't so squeamish. Draft boards snatched up the weak-eyed one, tabbed him "Admitted Service" and he was in the Army. Although Joe Astigmatism might have been Einstein's uncle, mentally, a sergeancy was his ceiling.

But Army has just established three officer training schools, shaped especially for the limited service draftee. There the fellows who are not physically qualified for combat, but who are not sufficiently lame, halt or blind for 4-F, can go to school and come out as commissioned officers, headed for administrative jobs. They will work as post adjutants or personnel officers, and likely will seep, eventually, into non-combatant jobs in all the various service classifications.

Products of these schools—which, by the way, are to start classes Oct. 1 at Grinnell College, Florida University and North Dakota Agricultural College—will be designated as "branch immaterial" officers, which is to say they belong to no specified section of the Army, but are available for duty in any administrative field which does not call for high technical knowledge.

The idea, of course, is to uproot a lot of seat-polishing officers who are fit for active duty, and to replace them with men who can polish the seat just as well, but who wouldn't be at home behind a machine gun emplacement. And the new program would seem to indicate that Army isn't taking too kindly to the Army Specialist Corps, which was organized for the same purpose—releasing line officers for field duty.

CHIEF difference between Army Administrative and Army Specialist is that the newly formed schools will pluck their candidates from the ranks, while the Specialist Corps was supposed to haul in from civilian life such men whose experience fitted them for Army administration, but whose age and/or physical qualifications entirely immunized them from selective service.

However, the suspicion is that Army never cottoned to the idea of the Specialist Corps; that there was a somewhat natural service resentment toward taking a civilian, arraying him in uniform, and handing him a rank that often topped men who had made Army their peacetime career.

HM Supervisor, Farm Security Administration

As new nutrition programs get started in Eastland County, every person should check up on his food habits. Did you know that one out of every five (5) of us is suffering from a hidden hunger although we live in a country which produces an abundance of foods?

How can we promote a nutrition program? Know what foods we need to make us strong; Eat the right foods; Plan your family's meals to include the right foods; Market to get the most nourishment for your money; Store and prepare foods to conserve nutritive value; Cook foods to tempt the appetites; Don't throw away a tablespoon of food that is good to eat; Help produce the necessary increase of dairy products, eggs, fruits and vegetables; Give some of your time to community nutrition projects. Who can do this? You and you and you. What results? Health improved; Reduce absences from school—help raise level of scholarship; Reduce number of days from work, thereby increasing earnings and production—This is important to war industry; The national bill for public welfare hospitalization and medical care would be cut, which in turn would help to prevent adding to public tax burden. Oct. 2 Is Dnger Day For India

The sole member of the Indian National Congress in America, R. Lal Singh, today predicted a new India crisis October 2nd unless President Roosevelt intervenes.

"October 2nd is Danger Day in India," said Mr. Singh.

"It is Gandhi's birthday. From every one of the 700,000 villages of India, men women and children will meet to observe the day. Their attitude toward the United Nations will be largely determined by what they hear from their leaders.

"If they could hear that President Roosevelt had asked Churchill to re-open negotiations with India, the crisis would be resolved. And if at the same time came word of the reality of the second front, October 2nd would become a day of greatest rejoicing throughout India. Indeed, such a combination would mean an early end for Herr Hitler."

Asked whether the events of the past few weeks in India have turned many Indians toward Japan, Mr. Singh responded "The greatly increased Japanese fifth column activity in northeast India has been not without effect, nevertheless, the overwhelming majority of the Indian people are profoundly anti-Axis. We want to fight on the side of the United Nations. But we can help more as freemen than we can as slaves."

"They also serve who only stand and wait" is cold comfort for the American woman of 1942 whose fighting spirit and love for her country make her look with longing eyes toward the battlefield where her brother, husband, son or sweetheart is stationed.

Her chance to help is here! Besides her hours at the Red Cross, her production work at a factory bench, her job as Air Raid Warden or seller of War Bonds, she carries a little white ration book in her purse—badge of an American housewife who is re-arranging her menus to include less sugar, conserving gasoline by walking instead of riding and stands ready to accept with a cheerful smile any other restrictions that are necessary to bring Victory. A TRIP TO KANSAS

CHAPTER XII

THE campaign for an honest city government was a triumph for the Courier. Never had there been such interest in an election. Jim worked endlessly, tirelessly. Absorbed in the campaign, Jim found little time to check activities on the plateau above Kirktown. Steam shovels were busy now, digging foundations, clearing the land for the ambitious project. Charlie Jones had undertaken for Penny.

ject assured her, "well ahead of schedule." Penny arrived at the mills to find the steel workers gathered curiously about the flag-draped platform erected for her. "Fellows," Penny said, "I have a confession to make. I'm not Penny Kellogg. I'm Penelope Kirk. I came into the mills the way I did to find out for myself what you're like and to learn what we can do to work together so that everyone will profit and everyone will be happy." Silence filled the room. "I know some of your grievances," she continued. "They're going to be corrected. I'm going to have an office right here in the mill. I want you to come in and see me any time you have anything on your mind. We're going to work together to make this the swellest steel outfit in the country. What do you say?" They said it, lustily and loudly. Penny was happy now, happier than ever before in her life. Three weeks had passed since Jim left. In another week Jim would return to share with her the pleasures she had planned so carefully. She parked her car in front of the Courier office, late in the afternoon. She was surprised to find the front door open. She walked in.

vacation and there it was. Like a kid getting a present from Santa Claus. "Tell them what a fool I was. I thought you were poor and friendless and wanted love. Tell them I actually made love to you. Tell them the poor sap actually thought you loved him. Good joke, isn't it?" He turned on his heel and walked out. Wearily, Penny closed the office door. She slid into her roadster and drove slowly to the apartment she still shared with Midge. She packed her clothes and a few little trinkets. Her luggage she placed in the trunk of her car. To Midge she wrote a brief, friendly farewell note. When she reached the Courier office the sun had already descended. She groped for a light switch, and the bright glare momentarily blinded her. As her vision cleared, she stared in astonishment. Grotesquely uncomfortable, Jim was slumped in the swivel chair he had rescued from the ruins of the old office. His head rolled crazily along the back edge of the chair. On the table in front of him stood an empty whisky bottle. Shocked, Penny stood still, debating what to do next. She remembered his steadfast resolution to refrain from drinking. Once before, drink had ruined his career. Suddenly the answer she sought dawned on her. "Don't you see?" she asked herself. "He needs you! He can't get along without you! You've won him! He's yours!" Jim had thrown his ancient valise in a corner. She carried it out to his dusty car, placing the heavy grip tenderly on the back seat. She removed her own luggage from the roadster and placed it beside his. She had some difficulty in rousing him sufficiently so that he could walk with her, instead, to the decrepit vehicle he loved so well. "Jim needs me," she repeated over and over again. "He needs me. He needs me." Now there was music in Penny's heart. Never had the night seemed so glorious. Never had a trip seemed so pleasant. Jim's car creaked and groaned, protestingly, but she wouldn't want it otherwise. "Okay, Jim," she said softly. "Just take it easy. You still have another week's vacation in Kansas coming to you. Remember your promise? You said you'd take me with you next time you went to Kansas. I want to meet your mom and dad. Besides, I'll need your mother's recipe for fried chicken." THE END

"Why don't you take a little vacation?" Penny suggested. "You certainly have earned one. Now that the election rush is over, I can handle the paper. You really should take it easy—for your own good."

"I wish I could get back to Kansas," Jim chuckled. "Mom would fill me so full of corn I'd cluck like a chicken. And speaking of chicken, Penny, you should taste the ones she fries. Nothing like it in the world."

"Go ahead, Jim," she urged. "Visit your folks. Forget the paper. You'll be better for it when you come back."

"Penny," Jim said, "I will go back! I want to tell the folks about you. This time I'll go alone. Next time, you're coming with me." He babbled happily, excitedly, about his folks and the scenes of his childhood. Once he had made up his mind, he couldn't bear the delay of packing and waiting for a train.

At the station he poured last-minute instructions to Penny. "I'll miss you, Penny," Jim whispered. "A month is a long time to be away from you." Yes—a month was a long time, she reflected, as she waved goodby to the fast-receding train.

In the busy weeks that followed, she found time to visit the Kirk offices once more. "Mr. Stimson," Penny told the executive, "I've come to ask you to accompany me on a trip through the mills. I want to meet all the men. I want a speaker's platform, and a microphone. I have something to say to them. Can you have everything ready tomorrow?" Stammering, the surprised Stimson agreed to make the preparations she demanded.

Daily, Penny drove to the plateau where construction of New Kirktown was progressing with amazing speed. "There's one building that must be finished within a month," she told Charlie Jones. "That's the Courier building."

"We'll have it done," the architect assured her, "well ahead of schedule."

"Penny," Jim said, "I will go back! I want to tell the folks about you. This time I'll go alone. Next time, you're coming with me." He babbled happily, excitedly, about his folks and the scenes of his childhood. Once he had made up his mind, he couldn't bear the delay of packing and waiting for a train.

Don't Be Fooled By A Full Junk Yard! DON'T LISTEN TO PEOPLE WHO SAY ---- "THEY CAN'T NEED SCRAP VERY BADLY. LOOK AT THAT JUNK YARD, OR THE AUTO GRAVE YARDS --- THEY'VE GOT PLENTY OF SCRAP. Pears Removed From Food List For Next Month

Food available to Eastland county families using blue food stamps during October will be the same as foods listed in September except fresh pears have been dropped from the list. Charles L. Howell, Area Supervisor, Agricultural Marketing Administration, announced today.

The complete list of blue stamp foods for the period October 1 through October 31 is: fresh apples, all fresh vegetables including sweet and Irish potatoes, shell eggs, corn meal, hominy, (corn) grits, dry edible beans,

Of course the junk yards are full. They are "factories" that turn out finished scrap—sorted, broken up, and bundled . . . ready for the mills of America. The scrap has to go through these yards, and it keeps going through fast! The auto graveyards too, are busy. They specialize in used car parts, but produce plenty of scrap as well. In June alone, these yards moved 450,000 tons—for they are required to junk within 60 days as many cars as they buy. As for Salvage Depots — communities all over the country are staging drives. All this scrap can't be taken away at once. The junkies can't handle it and the mills can't store it. But every pound is needed and will be used. We've got to pile it up ready for instant use at any time. The day when all junk yards are empty, when the auto graveyards are cleaned out, when all the local scrap stockpiles are gone—that is the day to dread. It is a day to avoid at all costs. So remember—steel is needed to fight the war, and millions of lives depend on it. This steel is made of 50 per cent scrap—and the mills have not enough scrap to last even 30 days longer. Tentative plans were made at Monday afternoon's meeting for trucks to pick up and haul all scrap into a central place of deposit in town. Home owners are urged to gather up any and all scrap metals available about their premises and place same where it will be accessible for truck drivers to get it.

Bill Jessop, chairman for Eastland in the scrap campaign, stated to the meeting that Eastland had fallen down thus far in getting in scrap an stated that it was his opinion that less than fifty per cent of the available scrap in Eastland and vicinity had been gathered up.

John Kleiner of Cisco, County chairman of the scrap drive, was present at the meeting. He has been very active in the present campaign and is well informed on the matter.

Another meeting will be held at the Chamber of Commerce tonight at 7:30 at which time citizens from the various communities adjacent to Eastland will discuss plans for gathering up the scrap in the country. This date, however, will be different from that in Eastland since the two drives will have to be handled differently.
