and politicians. Indeed, in this science of sophistication and artless education where the insinuating smile and almost faultless flattery are the chief weapons employed to bring home the bacon, the Dallas player of political chess is without a peer in the entire state, and as a superior, that individual has not been discovered in the Texas vineyard of political sociology.

Cause Of Fire In Coliseum Is Not Known

Flames Spread Rapidly, Destroying Exhibit Building, Two Hundred Automobiles Are Lost In Fire

OKLAHOMA CITY, Ok., May 27.—The proud coliseum, monument to the blooded livestock of the southwest and scene of many important public gatherings of the Oklahoma Capital City, was a mass of twisted steel and charred debris this afternoon.

Officials of the Coliseum Company and Fire Chief George Goff could give no reason for the sudden blaze which leveled the building within 30 minutes. The first intimation of the disaster was when a cloud of smoke rose from the center of the building and drifted over the industrial plants of packing town.

The loss of life occurred when firemen and volunteers rushed into the building to save 200 new Buick automobiles stored there. They were trapped and crushed by falling walls.

port of firemen said. None knew of the cause.

J. E. Brown, a stockman, reported he saw a wall fall on 10 men, at least one of whom was killed.

Four men, with chests crushed, were dragged from the ruins, as firemen looked through the piles of debris for other possible victims.

Dick Mason, a fireman, was burned to death when falling debris caught him.

Ernie Bell, fireman, was said to have died in the flames while helping A. F. Johnson, a railroad employe, to salvage an automobile. Johnson said a collapsing wall caught his young partner.

Ernie Bell, escaped death when companions pulled him from under a buckling wall.

The stately building erected in 1920 to house the famous South-west American Livestock Show was reduced to smoldering ruins within 30 minutes after the first blaze was noted. It was a mass of tangled steel and debris that afternoon which hindered cautious firemen from rescue work.

Only the east wall of the massive structure, covering more than two acres of space, was left standing.

Traffic arteries between the city and the coliseum were lined with automobiles. Ambulances found it difficult to force their way to hospitals with their cargoes of injured. Extra police were pressed into service to handle the militant crowd.

Most of the 200 automobiles stored in the building were charred ruins.

Loss was expected to reach $500,000. The coliseum carried $115,000 fire insurance.

Firemen, armed with pike poles ripped away fragments of the walls, fearful that they would find more victims. Soot covered and caked in heavy rubber coats, rescuers worked desperately despite the noonday heat.

King of Players

History makes mention of the fact that Bryan, the oracle of the Platte River country, was the king of all political chess players of his period. At San Francisco there were eight of his subjects from eight different states. He had written, or whispered, in the ear of each: "You would make an ideal candidate for the presidential nomination." Bryan ever hoped that he would be the nominee for a fourth term after the deadlock had been broken.

OUT OUR WAY

"Again in the city of New York, in 1924, there were 12 proud personages, all appointed by the Bryan oil of seductive flattery and all bearing letters or press clipping of approval for a nomination, awaiting for presidential lightning to strike with this "prince of peace" ever holding the center of the stage hoping for a descending bolt of delegated dynamite to strike him down for a third term. One of the 12 anointed political saints in that year, at the Madison Square Garden convention, was an unknown professor of a small college which nestled in a peaceful Florida village.

Senator Love apparently seized the mantle, or thought he did, when the peerless one passed out of the picture. Now, wrapped in the mantle and hugging to his breast the political chess board of the Bryan school where in he was an apt pupil and later a finished product of its methods and tactics, "the Dallas man with a political conscience" is swinging around the circle chessing his way for the advancement of his personal program, distributing the balm of Gilead here, the rare old wine of flattery there, cooing and coaxing and cajoling where there is demand for all three, and ever his eye on the chess board, to remove if possible the chess men whom he regards as the most formidable barriers in his political chess playing roadway—motivated, no doubt, at all times by the laudable ambition of forcing an easy entrance to the office of chief executive in the vast building on the capitol grounds where the route is direct to the mansion on the hill.

Master Player

Yes, a master political chess player, without a peer or superior in Texas in the Bryan art of personal hypnotism of the individual or individuals by methods both child-like and bland is the Dallas magician. He "offered" and played political chess at Austin with Governor Dan Moody, former Governor W. P. Hobby of the Houston Post-Dispatch, and Chairman Ross Sterling of the highway commission, with Highway Commissioner Cone Johnson, friend and adviser of all concerned, in the political lookout chair.

Senator Love's mode of approach is ever the same-frontal, but ever feeling his way, true to Bryan tactics and methods. First the senator figures the barriers in his political roadway are governor and the chairman of the state highway commission, who is likewise the proprietor of the Houston Post-Dispatch.

It is easy, or would be easy if he cared to say it, for the master political chess player to say to the governor, "If you are in the running, I shall withdraw from the race. Are you a candidate?" It would be just as easy perhaps, for him to whisper musically and lovingly and appealingly to Col. Sterling, "You should make an ideal governor. If you are to be in the running, I will bury my dearest ambition and give you my support. Moody should retire. He's had too terms and should make way for you if you are seeking the office."

Running True

And speaking of the above imaginary questions and answers, it would be running true to the methods and tactics of the Bryan school of political chess playing, wherein the Dallas senator, was educated and from which he graduated.

Be that as it may, there were conferences in Austin, with the master player of the game of political chess as child-like and bland as Bret Harte's heathen Chinese, playing the same innocently artlessly, and scientifically, no doubt, ever with a two-fold purpose, it is said, concealed in the back of his head—to clear the two biggest political stumps of the candidate class out of the political highway and, if he should fail in this, to bring about a rut in the close relations of the governor and the chairman of the state highway commission which would eventually force a loss of political strength in a certain well defined territory if the governor resisted all the blandishments of the Bryan school where political chess playing is taught and remained in the race, and Col. Sterling declined to sit in and make a play as a professional and candidate for the high office of governor.

In the days of old, the distinguished and lamented Bryan was the king of all political chess players. His tactics were adroit. He has a master pupil in Texas who is playing the game for all it is worth as he was taught by the master of all the tribe. This game of political chess opened at Houston by long distance phoning. There was a Dallas connection. Then, perhaps the talkie was extended to Tyler. Then all the participants named gathered around the table under the big dome in the capital city of Texas.

It was a conference behind closed doors. When it was over, a recess was taken from Austin to Houston where the Alphonse and Gaston act was repeated with Tyler's elderly statesman and highway commissioner watching the movements of the chessmen as well as the continuous play on the board.

Are Convinced

As for Moody, those who know the conditions in Texas and the temperament of the voters of all factions are thoroughly convinced that the red-headed one, if he cares to run again, is certain of re-nomination and reelection. They knew that before Senator Love's departure for Houston by way of San Antonio, he could have wisewaggled to the capital city press correspondents. "A court decision Moody, as the nominee of the Democratic party for governor this year, Moody should step aside. As for my dear friend, Ross Sterling, he is in the prime of manhood and rich and can afford to wait his turn."

It goes without argument that Senator Love is playing for big stakes—governor of Texas in 1930. Near Moody's dearest friend, Ross Sterling, chairman of the delegation to the national convention in 1922. Texas member of the national committee, and perhaps, a cabinet portfolio in 1923, should the Democrats elect a president, by chance or accident in 1922. He is of the Bryan school of methods and tactics, and a master player of the political chess game.

E. V. Allen Happy Death Sentence Was Commuted

A bench warrant was issued this morning in the 88th district court by Judge Elzo Been instructing Sheriff Virge Foster to transfer E. V. Allen, convicted on a charge of robbing the First State Bank at Hunsville.

Allen, the only man ever given the death penalty in a bank robbery where no one was killed or injured, appeared in open court and withdrew his motion and affidavit of insanity. One of the grounds for reversing the case was the comment of a juror that Allen should be given the death penalty to convert him.

"I am the happiest man in the State," Allen said this morning. "I had given up all hope and was resigned to my fate when I received word that Governor Moody had commuted my sentence to life penitentiary and make a good penitentiary man make a good prisoner."

Allen was convicted on a charge of robbing the Carbon bank and was given the death penalty by the jury. The Civil Liberties Union of Boston, Massachusetts, an organization opposed to the infliction of capital punishment, became interested in the case and hired Maury Hughes of Dallas, to secure a new hearing on a plea that Allen had become insane during his confinement. Allen's alleged partner in the crime was S. T. Hayden, who was given 99 years.

The case was one of the most sensational ever heard in a district court in this part of the country. Joe H. Jones, county attorney and Maury Hughes got into repeated arguments during the course of the sanity hearing and both drew fines from the court on contempt charges. The trial resulted in a hung

The day before Allen was to have been executed Governor Moody granted a reprieve. Twice he was saved from the chair by the governor. The last time, his case was before the Governor he commuted his sentence to life imprisonment.

The statement of Allen's this morning in the district court and the withdrawal of his plea of insanity brings to a close one of the most notorious cases in the history of the state, a case which attracted attention over the entire nation because of the severity of the punishment meted out to the defendant.

Preparations are being made to make the transfer from the Eastland county jail to the State penitentiary.

Fifteen years after his graduation, Dr. Caldwell became famous for a single prescription, which now, after forty years, is still making friends.

Today Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative. Millions of people never think of using anything else when they're bilious, feverish or weak; when breath is bad, tongue coated, or they're suffering from nausea, gas, or lack of appetite or energy.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; gently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the bowels.

After Fatal Collapse of Building

NEA New York Bureau

Here is the jumble of wreckage in which two men died and a score were injured when a building under construction collapsed in New York. Tall girders are shown tilted in the air at crazy angles—one is slanted obliquely against the walls of an adjoining factory—after the steel framework of the four-story structure had crumbled and crashed, trapping some of the workmen underneath. An investigation of the accident was ordered.

British Dirigible Groomed for Flight to Canada

The huge British dirigible, R-100, which plans a flight across the Atlantic to Montreal soon, is pictured here being brought out of the hangar at Cardington, England, for a test flight. Shortly after this picture was taken, this aerial Leviathan was damaged when its starboard fin grazed the hangar.

...tive, she studiously avoided interfering with him in any way. She wanted him to understand that he had complete liberty to shape his life as he willed. She would not hold him, she declared to herself time and again.

But she knew, by the still unadmitted ache in her heart, that she had not entirely changed from her old self. There were times, when she thought that Alan might be with Bernadine, when she could have gone into hysterics had she given the slightest rein to her feelings.

It was only because she strove to be gallant, that they went on as they did. A little less noble weakness and she would have been in her arms on one of the many occasions when they both were yearning to shut out the past with a lasting embrace.

Florence, aware that the break between them was not completely mended, grieved over her inability to help them further. Finally she decided that they might get on better if they were left alone.

She told Natalie she was homesick, and stayed only for the one real party that was scheduled for her, Gladys Wynne was giving it. It was not a success, as far as she and Natalie were concerned. Wanda Perry, no less gushing than ever, chose the occasion to rave over Bernadine Lamont. She had met her, she said, in Alan's of...fice. "And girls, we might as well let go and die happy eating carbohydrates, because there isn't a ghost of a show with that lady in our midst. But, speaking of ghosts, she looks much like one herself, only it's perfectly fascinating and appealing."

Florence saw Natalie written and wince. Quickly she looked about, and saw that others were observing her sister also. On the way home, they drove in silence. Florence left the next day. On the train she cried a little. It was tough to have to leave Andy just when they'd started shopping for a ring. But Natalie's unhappiness was real, she knew.

"And I guess it can't be fixed up with a sister-in-law around," she sniffed.

She'd have wept even more, no doubt, if she'd known how little her sacrifice helped Natalie. For it was a shadow that she could not dispel that clouded her sister's sky.

It was Alan's belief that he had to maintain a sort of polygamist faithfulness. He could never bring himself to believe he was justified in forcing a break with Phillipa; so she stood like a stone wall between him and Natalie.

And Natalie silently suffered over her erroneous idea of what kept them apart. Alan surprised her penetrating gaze upon his face time and again, and wondered what she was thinking. Surely, he tried to reassure himself, she must know that there was something he could not tell her—something he could not settle by discussion.

He was really fearful that she would force the issue—destroy the little happiness they were having. When it seemed to him that she was on the verge of speaking of their anomalous mode of living, he drew away, silenced her.

She, on her part, encouraged herself in their failure to adjust their life along happier lines by thinking that Alan was content to accept things as they were. If he really wanted any other woman, she told herself, he would not have come back to her, or having come in time of need, he would have gone when the need no longer existed.

It was this doubt of Alan's heart interests that helped her in her struggle to submerge her pride in determination to let Alan settle everything without interference from her. If there was a mistake made, it would not be hers, she assured herself over and over.

And there was proof that she was on the right course. She, too, frequently surprised Alan looking at her in an odd way. It made her shoulder and comfort him. "He wants to come back to me," her heart would sing. "But, let him alone," her experience advised.

And then, one day, she went to his office and saw Bernadine Lamont there.

with Phillipa. He knew nothing else to depend upon but time, though he realized he turned to it somewhat blindly.

Phillipa's attitude seemed unchangeable. She gave Alan to understand in decently veiled, but unmistakable terms, that she considered him in honor bound to her. The idea might not have weighed so heavily with Alan—against the sure knowledge that Natalie was the woman he loved—had she not also added the burden of sacrifice to the rest of it.

Alan wasn't flattered to think that she thus balanced him against another man—Geoffrey Norman it was, that she might have had. But his gallantry and common sense made him think that justice was their bargain in a marriage without love in the first place. What right had he to insist now that it should be weighed in?

At times he felt like cursing Phillipa, but his wrath never quite broke through the placidity of his present mood. Things as they were while far from being perfectly satisfactory to him, were still much too hopeful to be gambled against Phillipa's sense of fairness. As long as she would avoid a crisis, he wanted to also.

For the first few days of his return home she demanded, when she had the opportunity, that he leave again. Alan began to stay away from the office, so she modified her insistence and begged him to promise to move back to his hotel when his sister was out of danger. Alan evaded an answer.

Florence did not get better too soon. Having plenty of leisure she did a lot of thinking, and wisely concluded that Alan might need a good excuse for staying home until the storm blew over. She was sure there must be a storm raging somewhere, for Alan, the poor goof, was cuckoo over Natalie. It was as plain as the nose on Cyrano de Bergerac's face that he would have been back the instant Natalie returned, if he had dared, Florence told Andrew on one of his visits.

"But how's it going to work out?" Andrew wanted to know. "If there really is another woman, he's still in a triangle."

"Yes," Florence agreed. "But if he just does nothing about it, what's the dame going to do?"

"She might blow over."

"Yes, she might, but it's not letting things alone that causes trouble so much as it's monkeying with 'em. She'll die down."

"Gee, I hope so," Andrew enthused. "Your sister and Converse act like a couple of shy kids, just beginning to wonder what it's all about. It's a knockout."

Florence grinned with him. "They are funny, aren't they?" she agreed.

"How much longer have you got to string your act?" Andrew asked, sobering suddenly.

"What's hot?"

"My boss gave me a couple of tickets to a good show."

Florence sighed in genuine grief. "I've got to see how things work out," she said resignedly.

"Say, who is this husband stealing Girc, anyhow?"

Florence puckered her brows. "I'm not sure," she answered thoughtfully; "but I believe Natalie thinks it is one Bernadine Lamont."

"What! The Lamont? Some rival?"

"So you've heard of her?" Florence inquired coldly.

"Get easy, honey," Andrew adjured her. "She never heard of anyone less than a bank president."

Florence extended her hand, with a laugh. "Well, lucky you, jealous is one thing I'm never going to be, anyway."

"Then you don't mind if I take another girl to the show so as not to waste the tickets?"

Florence swallowed hard and tried to look pleasant. Andrew laughed. "Honey," he said; "Stick to it; be game. For when you're sweet like that I wouldn't hurt you for the world. But do you think you can trot out next week?"

Florence, weighing matters later on, decided that some attention was due her own affairs. She got suddenly better. But by that time, home had become a habit with Alan. He had a bad half hour with Phillipa when she discovered, as she did by telephoning his house on some pretext of business, that Florence was convalescing. It was Natalie who told her.

Alan remained adamant under her threats and pleas. He simply refused to promise anything or to do anything except to go on commuting to Hillshire.

Both he and Phillipa hid a secret fear. He, that she would do something that would alienate Natalie from him for all time; she, that he would turn upon her and break clean their relations. She told herself it was better to keep the hold she had upon him and hope for a chance to strengthen it.

Thus slowly as a sluggish stream moved the affairs of these three, until Phillipa's hoped-for opportunity came.

Bernadine Lamont played a part in it, Natalie had not mentioned her name to Alan since her return. There never had been any talk between them that might have led up to it. She did not know whether or not he visited Bernadine, and she made no effort to find out. For there was still an estrangement between them.

Natalie was growing as desperate under it as was Phillipa over Alan's refusal to quit his home again. She began, after her initial feeling of relief at having him

PRISON PLAN IS GIVEN BY E. B. MAYFIELD

SPUR, Texas, May 26.—After a week's intensive speaking campaign, former United States Senator Earle B. Mayfield, candidate for governor, addressed an audience of Dickens county citizens here in the interest of his candidacy.

Asserting that Texas should have a modern prison system in which could be instituted, without delay, all those scientific methods that experience has shown are best calculated to bring about the reformation of those convicts that are capable of being reformed, the speaker said, "I think it is absurd to say that Texas cannot have such a prison system unless it is located within 20 or 30 miles of the city of Austin."

"The state owns 80,000 acres of prison land, and we should think a long while before disposing of them for a new site. Within sight of the Imperial prison farm, the Humble Oil company, in March, 1927, brought in its first oil well, with an initial production of 800 barrels a day, and today that same company has nine wells on the same survey. I am at a loss to know why there has not been a test for oil on the Imperial farm, I believe there is enough oil under the Imperial farm to construct one of the most modern prison systems possible, and if I am elected governor, one of the first things on my program will be to have this particular tract of land drilled for oil."

"I believe that a suitable location for the construction of a modern prison system can be found on state-owned lands, although as governor, I would not adopt the 'rule or ruin' attitude on the matter," continued Senator Mayfield. "I would be willing to locate the penitentiary system wherever the combined wisdom of the people of our state, speaking through their respective representatives, says it should be situated, provided the legislature adjusted the tax laws so that those interests now escaping taxation would be made to pay their proper proportion of state taxes."

Calling upon those who favor the removal of the penitentiary system to tell the taxpayers of the state where and how the expense money necessary for removal is to be secured," Senator Mayfield said. "The purchase of additional lands, together with the construction of a modern system, will cost between five and ten millions of dollars. The state would not build a system with revenue from the ad valorem tax, unless it neglects to a still greater degree the educational system, the schools for the orphans, the asylums for the insane and the duty to the destitute widows and dependent soldiers. If my views on taxation are enacted into law, the state can then construct a real prison system without the confiscation of farms, ranches, and the homes of the law-abiding population, and without doing irreparable injury to those institutions entirely in the first consideration of the state."

Put Convicts To Work "Antiquated methods of operation and the lack of centralization of its properties are the reasons for the failure of the penitentiary system to be self-supporting. In 1928, $286,488.70 worth of foodstuffs were purchased by the prison system. All of this could have been produced on prison lands by prison labor. It is no surprise that the legislature has had to appropriate over $8,000,000 in the last six years for the support and maintenance of an institution operated on such unbusinesslike methods. If there were established a packing plant, a canning factory, an up-to-date dairy, and a refrigerator plant, it would then be possible for the penitentiary to produce every dollar's worth of food and produce it consumes, and it could also furnish such supplies to the other state institutions which amounts to about $1,000,000 yearly. Binder twine for wheat farmers should be manufactured by the penitentiary system, as should also cotton baling from low grade cotton. Automobile license plates, highway signs, road drags and other materials used in the construction of the highways could be made there also.

"Such an industrial plan as I have advocated," pointed out Mr. Mayfield, "would provide sufficient employment to the incorrigible who must, at all times, be confined within the prison proper, and would not be objectionable to free labor and private industry in the state."

MOM'N POP

Was the War as Black as Books Now Show It?

"War never could be like that!" say those who protest the flood of books about it which have come from the publishers' presses. "It is all nightmarish exaggeration!" "Pray, what war were you in?" wrote one young American to the author of "Stepdaughters of War," scoffing at the idea that it could be as bad as this daughter of an English earl, who served as an ambulance driver, has painted it. Yet there were others who told her that they recognized some of the landmarks in her story. One ambulance driver wrote her that he KNEW two of the hospitals she mentioned but that she had placed the third too far along on a certain road. Most stay-at-homes, moreover, cannot fail to admit that her accounts of the rabid patriotism of those days and the "claptrap of the recruiting platform" are true. Helen Zenna Smith, the author of "Stepdaughters of War," has a rancid resentment for the furious flag-waving of the stay-at-homes, stronger than her terror of driving an ambulance full of raving men alone, or her nausea at the disgusting duties she was forced to perform. Little wonder that these young men and women had a leaden outlook on the world, when one could say to the other,

"You're not alive very long nowadays, if you're young, are you?" while those at home kept reiterating to have "perfectly splendid" it was how "their boys and girls doing their bit at the front!" The same feeling is expressed by Henry Williamson, author of "The Pathway," in his "Wet Flanders Plain" in which he writes bitterly of those American tourists who see in the battle-fields an opportunity to buy tin hats as souvenirs, and dams their "patriotism" as "matured stupidity." He writes of a revisit to the battle-fields of Flanders where he, and others like him, fought or died. The mine craters and rotting wooden crosses of that countryside, evoke memories of their agonies. He sees burnt wastes, shattered trees and "remains of grey uniform cloth as black and brittle as old mushroom fragments dried by the sun." He tells of the terrible fighting during 1915. "The French, who attacked, perished in far greater numbers than the German... The old problem of the immovable object being struck by the irresistible force was solved in its human variations... The force and object were shocked into a fluid consciousness. The change of consciousness crystallized into "Under Fire" by Henri Barbusse, a book which swept through the soluble thought of France in the following year, (1916), as it swept through the soluble thought of Germany." Williamson tells how, when he mentioned this book to some French peasants, on this recent trip their eyes lit up. "That was reality, la verite. Only a week before a German soldier, looking for the grave of his brother, had come to the village and it so happened that he had read Barbusse, and had declared that it was true for the German soldier as well as for the French! He was a comrade, that Boche... He was a man like themselves, but in the war his uniform happened to be a different color." One suspects that a collection of letters by French, or English, or American soldiers would be very much like the "German Students' War Letters" which Philip Witkop has collected. Although the young authors of "All Quiet on the Western Front," "Stepdaughters of War," and "The Wet Flanders Plain" may be accused of exaggeration, that charge cannot be launched against these boys. They were solicitous for the feelings of those at home and showed a fine courage, but even so the horror and terror of the war seeps into these letters. "Hounding men to death" and "systematized manslaughter," they call it. And they write of its futility: "If one could accomplish something, the bullets wouldn't hurt so much," they say. As early as 1914 a German soldier who had read some letters found on a dead Frenchman, wrote: "Everything is just like it is with us, and when one reads such things it quenches the last spark of hatred toward the French, even if one still felt

"OUT OUR WAY" America's Most Widely Read Comic

FORTY MILLION people can't be wrong! That is the estimated number of readers of that great comic feature, "Out Our Way," by J. R. (Jim) Williams. To Jim Williams, the world is filled with "folks"—not persons. He excels in human interest. With pathos and comedy, humor as it really is. He can produce a robust chuckle or a wistful smile. His characters—kids or cowboys, mothers or machinists—are unfaillingly human. As Eugene Field or James Whitcomb Riley pictured life in poetry, Jim Williams depicts it on the drawing board. Why does this comic have such an appeal? We think the answer will be found at the right.

Sets New Looping Record For Women

MUSKOGEE, Ok., May 27.—A new world's record for successive loops by a woman flyer—almost tripling the former mark—was claimed here today by Laura Ingalls, girl flier of St. Louis.

Through the gathering darkness at Hatbox Field, Miss Ingalls brought her Gypsy-Moth plane to the ground last night after looping 980 consecutive times, bettering her former record by 636 loops.

Still unsatisfied by her performance, the 24-year-old aviatrix said today she would make another attempt to pass the 1000-mark.

"I would have made a thousand loops easily if it hadn't been for the darkness," she said. "I'll pass that mark yet."

National Aeronautics officials who were making an official check of the flight called Miss Ingalls to the ground when it became to dark her plane was obscured at the 10,000 foot altitude she maintained.

Miss Ingalls took off before a crowd of 40,000 which had gathered to witness the dedicatory ceremonies in connection with the opening of a new 410-acre flying field here.

WITH THE TEXAS LEAGUE

Wichita Falls, leading the Texas League with 23 victories and 15 defeats, today was scheduled to clash with Shreveport and attempt to make a clean sweep of the five-game series. The Spudders annexed their fourth consecutive victory over the Sports Monday, 4 to 7.

Three Wichita Falls batters, Vincent, Kloza and Bettencourt, hit home runs in the late innings to defeat Shreveport after the Sports had held a two-run lead for six innings. Vincent was credited with the victory.

Fort Worth went into a tie for fourth place with Shreveport by defeating Dallas, 4 to 1. The Steers scored their lone tally when Larmon Cox, Cat outfielder, injured his leg attempting to catch a fly.

The Waco-Beaumont and San Antonio-Houston games, scheduled for Monday, had been played as part of Sunday's double headers.

FAMILY MENU

BY SISTER MARY
NEA Service Writer

MANY home-makers of today often wonder just what vegetables, sauces and garnishes should be served with certain meats and what desserts are dietetically right with the remainder of the meal.

Beef, lamb, veal, mutton, poultry and fish are the summer meats with many varieties of "by-products" offered to tempt lagging appetites. Smoked pork products, the so-called "summer sausages," beef and veal tongue, both fresh and corned, as well as corned beef, add to the list.

Almost any vegetable goes well with beef. Mushroom sauce is delicious and horseradish traditional. The dessert should be simple and not too rich, for beef is one of the hearty meats. The cut of the type of dessert. Filet of beef demands a more elaborate dessert than round steak.

This is an excellent beef combination:

- Clear Tomato Soup
- Roast Beef
- Browned Potatoes
- Brown Gravy
- Horseradish
- Green Beans
- Shredded Cabbage and Carrot
- Snow Pudding

With lamb and mutton, a tart jelly such as currant, mint or barberry is usually served. Vegetables good with mutton are mashed potatoes, creamed white turnip, green peas, asparagus, cauliflower, spinach, tomatoes—any of the strong flavored vegetables. Caper sauce is served with mutton. Green peas are traditional with lamb, and spinach or any leaf vegetable is good. The dessert for either lamb or mutton should be of fruit in some fashion or a frozen dessert may be used.

Veal needs a tart jelly and a well-seasoned sauce of some sort. Hollandaise sauce is used with omelet, brown sauce, onion or veal. The vegetables should not be too pronounced in flavor. Green beans, green peas, asparagus, spinach and carrots are especially good. The dessert may be anything but a gelatine concoction. Veal is a "light" meat, so the dessert can well be of the richer and heartier type.

Chicken, probably the most popular kind of poultry for warm weather, needs a tart jelly such as cranberry or currant and a sauce of jelly or conserve with a sharp flavor can be used. Rice is often substituted for potatoes. When there is gravy, noodles or dumplings are good. Green corn, green peas, lima beans, all the succulent summer vegetables and creamed omelet are particularly good. Chicken is lacking in fat, so a rather rich dessert can be used. The smoked meats need tart jellies and piquant sauces. Spinach, green beans and green peas, asparagus and lima beans are suitable for a fruit dessert. A fruit dessert is always acceptable.

Says Advertising Is Nation's Need

"Retail merchants cannot afford to ignore the need of consistent advertising in their local papers if they want to earn consistent profits and expand," said William H. Rankin, President of the advertising agency of that name, during the convention of the Advertising Federation of America in Washington last week. The success of national prosperity is mainly dependent on prosperous retailing, Mr. Rankin avers, and only thru local and national advertising can any business maintain the volume required. Mr. Rankin was recently awarded $350,000 in a suit he won against the Associated Bill Posters for violation of contracts. The suit had been in the United States courts since 1918.

- No. 3—Simla, where "civil disobedience" volunteers were scattered with fire hose; five arrested.
- No. 4—Chittagong, scene of bloody riots in which five natives were killed.
- No. 5—Calcutta, British stronghold and scene of historic "Black Hole of Calcutta" episode in mutiny of 1756, when 146 English prisoners were cooped overnight in small, stifling room, only 23 emerging alive.
- No. 6—Purandah, where Gandhi is imprisoned in a British fortress under heavy guard.
- No. 7—Sholapur, scene of serious riots in which natives killed British police and burned bodies in public square; city re-taken by British, 15 natives being killed and several hundred reported wounded.
