U. S. TO MAINTAIN "OPEN DOOR" POLICY

GRIPINGS

By GUS

This column is published as a daily feature and may not be construed as representing the editorial views of this paper. What follows is merely what one man thought at the time it was written, and the writer reserves the right to change his mind concerning any subject, without notice, explanation or apology.

Well, well, now ain't this something to see the sunshine again after having one whole week of wet weather. For a while I was thinking that our rain was going to make Noah's ark like a May shower. But here is the sunshine and we have nothing to gripe about.

So, my dear readers, I will not gripe today and let you stay outside and enjoy all this. Because I know that you would read this and keep you if I put too much here.

PEEPING THRU THE KNOTHOLE

with BILL MAYES

Yesterday afternoon about the time it started raining again, we sat on a bench and talked to Clint Davis for a while. And, incidentally, we snuggled a hole in the seat of our pants when we got up to leave.

We learned several things from Clint, but we doubt whether they were worth snuggling our trousers over. Among other things we learned that Clint has some very decided ideas about banquets, entertainments, and the American Legion, the 40 and 8, rain and sports, particularly baseball. Clint was once a pretty good ball player and still loves the game. He had a catcher's mitt, glove and baseball yesterday to get numbered up a little.

We wanted to tell him what a whizz we used to be at playing baseball, but we were afraid he might check up on us by asking us to play catch and we would throw a shoulder out of joint or something. Anyway, Clint and I we tried to play baseball some several years ago. We dodged the first strike, swung at the first ball and connected with the third. It sailed over right field and we started for first, made it and started for second. By the time we got there we were so winded we couldn't go further, though we had plenty of time. Shortly after that we muffed an easy grounder, picked it up and threw about four feet over the first baseman's head and played the rest of the game on the bench.

But we were going to tell about Clint. He didn't know he was talking for publication and we didn't warn him that anything he said would be used against him. He had been around town nearly all day asking people how they felt about the American Legion banquet, which had no speakers but plenty of entertainment. The response he got was so enthusiastic that he was almost ready to put on another one tonight.

Mostly we played "yes man" to Clint, but we thoroughly endorsed what he had to say. He said that he thought speeches at a banquet are the bunk and that more people would enjoy banquets if there was more entertainment and less talking. He is keen on entertainment. He compared the recent banquet with one two years ago which ended about 11:30 with everyone bored to tears before the program was completed and said that a good, snappy banquet was enjoyed by everyone.

He suggested open meetings of the Carl Barnes post about once a month, at which time the three would be invited and urged to attend as well as legionnaires from neighboring posts. Talent from within the Legion and from the citizenship of the town would be utilized to put on a 30 or 45-minute program, free of charge. He believes that a program could be worked out every few months with the co-operation of the legionnaires, and citizens that would provide entertainment and create a closer feeling between the members of the post and the citizens of the town and give the citizens a better knowledge of the Legion.

His idea was to have a very short business session previous to the entertainment, at which the citizens would be welcomed. Then, if any business could be transacted rapidly, it would be completed and the entire assembly invited in to see the program that had been arranged for that night.

Clint admits that it might not go over so big the first night or two, but that as soon as a few

SMALL BILL HELD INVALID BY COURT

AUSTIN, Feb. 24.—The state supreme court today held invalid a bill passed by the last legislature giving holders of 8,000,000 acres of school land all of the oil bonus and all but 1-16 royalty. The decision was given in the suit brought by former Attorney General Claude Pollard against the Empire Oil and Fuel company. Pending the decision approximately $100,000 of disputed royalties have been placed in escrow and will go to the state.

Under the decision the state is entitled to half of the oil bonus on the land, half of the grazing rental and half of the oil royalty. The bill was offered in the Senate by Senator Clint Small.

CHINESE GUNS SHELL WHARF OF JAPANESE

SHANGHAI, Feb. 24.—Chinese artillery mounted on railway trucks bombarded the Japanese wharves in the international settlement tonight. The shelling was caused by reports that the Japanese were preparing to land reinforcements. The mayor of Shanghai protested against tonight to the United States consul general against landing of Japanese troops in the international settlement. The mayor disclaimed responsibility for foreign lives in the event Chinese defensive actions are necessary. He suggested evacuation of foreigners from areas within the Japanese defense sector of the settlement which appeared to be a real bombardment of that part of the settlement might be contemplated. The Japanese were expected to file a warning with the United States consul general against Americans fighting with the Chinese over the pilot of a plane shot down by Japanese was identified as Robert Short, an American. Chinese newspapers today lauded Short in eulogies to his bravery in "daring to die" in fighting with the Chinese to repulse the invaders.

STIMSON SAYS JAPS VIOLATE PEACE TREATY

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—The United States through today's announcement by Secretary of State Stimson warned Japan that if it does not respect China's sovereignty this country might have to reconsider the limits of battlefields in the Pacific under the Washington treaty. It also provided for movements to protect American investments in the Orient. That it the way Stimson's letter to Borah was intercepted by officials here.

STIMSON SAYS JAPS VIOLATE PEACE TREATY

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—Secretary of State Stimson today announced to the world that the United States would stand by its "open door" policy in the Orient. He also indirectly charged Japan with violating the nine-power treaty and the Kellogg Pact. Had the treaties been "faithfully observed" the present situation in China could not have developed, he said. He further affirmed that if the nine-power treaties were disregarded the whole structure of the Washington treaty of 1922 would be disturbed. By this treaty the United States limited its naval power in the Pacific and agreed not to strengthen its fortifications in that area. The statement was made in the form of a letter to Chairman Borah of the Senate foreign relations committee.

STERLING TO LEAVE TROOPS IN OIL FIELD

HOUSTON, Feb. 24.—Governor Sterling said today he will not remove troops from East Texas or allow wells to produce beyond the present limit until ordered to do so by the courts.

Although an opinion condemning martial law in the field has been written by three federal judges they have not issued an injunction or any other kind of order, the governor said. As soon as the order is issued by the United States supreme court, he said.

Back from a conference in Houston with Judge J. C. Hutcheson and various parties in the martial law injunction hearing, Assistant Attorney General Upchurch said today he will advise the railroad commission that it is "advisable" for them to act at once. He said all parties agreed to make no statement of the order that was drafted at Houston for approval by the three-judge federal court.

AUSTIN, Feb. 24.—The Texas state railroad commission will hold a session today to fix an allowable production for East Texas. It was indicated the allowable would be near that now existing under military rule.

Alleged Member of Robbery Gang Taken in Dallas

DALLAS, Feb. 24.—Otto Cox, alias Jack Roson, was arrested today as a fourth member of an alleged bandit gang held responsible for 50 holdups in Dallas and Fort Worth.

The arrest of Cox came as an aftermath to the capture of three alleged accomplices, one of whom, Lawrence Evans, was shot and seriously wounded by detectives. The other two men were Jim Morgan and Brooks Woodman. These two, with Evans, have been charged in Fort Worth with robbery with firearms in connection with taking of $400 in a laundry holdup Saturday night.

A new trial was ordered for John L. Green, who received a death verdict in Medina county as a participant in the killing of Frank Kempf.

Dr. Hill Warns Salary Cuts Will Harm Education

CANYON, Tex.—Dr. J. A. Hill, president of the Texas State Teachers association, warned today that teacher salary reductions at this time will damage education for years to come, "because it will drive out of the profession many of the most capable teachers."

Dr. Hill, also president of the West Texas State Teachers college, pleaded that the present level of school teachers' salaries be maintained in the face of demands for drastic reductions of taxes and public expenditures. For a short period of time, the educational tax burden might be lightened without deterioration of service but in the end education will suffer a severe setback, he warned.

FARM LOAN COMMITTEES ARE NAMED

At a meeting held Tuesday afternoon in the office of the county agent at Eastland, a committee of three was selected to act as Eastland county federal farm loan committee.

Those selected were John Thurman of Ranger, Bill Tyler of Rising Star and W. S. Michael of Eastland. A local committee was appointed in Ranger composed of Edwin George Jr., Tom Carpenter and C. E. May, which will assist in securing loans from the federal farm board for farmers of Ranger and the Ranger territory.

Anti-Hoarding Campaign Mapped Out For Texans

FORT WORTH.—The war against money-hoarding in Texas was on today. In command was A. P. Barrett, wealthy Fort Worth real estate dealer, with a complete plan of attack mapped out which it is hoped will drive the "rusty" dollars from old stockpiles and safety deposit vaults alike.

The first assault will be an intensive educational drive to familiarize the public with the object of the campaign, its workings and its benefits, and to instruct persons in investments, banking, securities and the economies of credit. These instructions will be given in classrooms, by radio broadcast and from church pulpits, Barrett said. "Let's Go America," is the battle cry.

Whitney Defends Short Selling

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—Richard Whitney, president of the New York stock exchange, said today before a house committee the exchange would have been closed a month ago if it had not been for the stabilizing effect of short selling.

Whitney was testifying in connection with proposed legislation to regulate short selling. He defended the practice, saying that without it the market for securities would not have been maintained after the 1929 collapse.

KILGORE, Texas, Feb. 24.—State Senator John W. E. H. Beck of DeKalb, a lieutenant colonel in charge of the medical department of the national guard in East Texas, today said the constitution prevented his appointment as successor to Railroad Commissioner Pat Neff.

Neff is expected to resign from the commission to become president of Taylor university. Austin dispatches said Beck, personal friend of Governor Sterling, had been mentioned.

FACTS ABOUT PROHIBITION
 If prohibition is to be preserved its champions should awake to the fact that they have a fight upon their hands. The advocates of strict prohibition can not recognize and forgo the danger to their cause any to soon. For the strength and purpose of the forces of repeal are more unified and formidable than at any time in history.

This is more or less the situation today: The defection of Finland has left the United States the one country in which prohibition remains a legal, if not an actual, fact. The American Legion, numbering among its members thousands upon thousands of men who are just coming into their political prime, has gone on record for modification. Congress has more wet Representatives and Senators than ever before. In Texas organized labor is committed to 2.75 per cent beer. Texas people are financing the political campaigns of wet candidates for governor and for congressmen-at-large. Within both major parties, an active campaign is being waged for modification and repeal. Independently of the parties, a half dozen strong organizations are fighting for repeal. But more injurious to the cause than anything else—and it is a fact that must be faced, however distasteful the task may be—is the regrettable truth that more than one of the leaders in the prohibition cause have within the past year been publicly discredited.

Prohibition, it will be recalled, has never been submitted to a popular referendum. Until that submission has been had, the demand for modification and repeal never will and never can, be stilled. Eventually if not now, the people will demand the right to dispose of the question.

If the question of prohibition were submitted to the people now, it is almost certain that repeal and modification forces would be decisively defeated. But, if the proponents of prohibition persist in their refusal to submit, considering the fact that the enemy is continually winning converts, a delayed referendum may write a different story.

Give the repeal advocates their referendum and they have lost nine-tenths of their effective ammunition. Give them a referendum now and they have lost their fight. But let them grow strong enough to force a referendum, and they will also be strong enough to win the decision. It would appear to be good political strategy to give the repealists their referendum now.—This Week's Opinion.

MARTIAL LAW RULED OUT BY FEDERAL JUDGES

A three-judge federal court administered a knockout to the power of the governor to enforce and declare martial law in the oil districts of East Texas. An economic issue at stake, whether the military could continue to curb the East Texas oil field's vast production, was somewhat subordinated in the trial to the question of constitutional law; the extent of the governor's power in the declaration and enforcement of martial law. Well, the decision of the court was adverse to the governor. An injunction restraining the continuance of martial law was made permanent; the military was ordered out of the field; conservation of a natural resource by military law was given a black eye.

Now it is said the state railroad commission will step in when the state's troops march out. Conservation of the natural wealth of Texas has been the cry of the people for years and years. Now it is said it will be up to the lawmakers of the state to enact conservation measures that will conserve as well as to run the gauntlet with the courts both state and federal.

Governor Sterling did all in his power to stabilize the oil industry in the East Texas fields. Crude was selling at 10 cents a barrel. Read the price levels of today. Read the price level of natural gas at the source of supply and then at the point of delivery to customers in far away states. Really, the ablest men of Texas should be drafted to serve as lawmakers, to reform the tax laws of the state, to eliminate a fee system that appears to be infamous and to provide for a reign of economy and fair instead of fat salaries all along the line.

WILLIAM GIBBS McADOO FOR GARNER.

In many bitter campaigns and national contests for the presidential prize, William Gibbs McAdoo was a spectacular figure. He lost to James M. Cox in 1920, William Jennings Bryan delivered the blow. He lost to John W. Davis in 1924. Alfred E. Smith's flag went down in the same contest. John D. Davis was overwhelmed at the polls. His choice in 1928 was Senator Thomas J. Walsh. Smith carried the California primaries. McAdoo remained silent until the close of the bitter campaign, and on election day voted the straight democratic ticket.

Now he has found himself. He has announced his preference. He is for John N. Garner for President standard bearer. This after viewing the field of possibilities and weighing the conditions and the prejudices and the passions of the past. After paying a very high tribute to the Speaker, the noted Californian returns this verdict: "Mr. Garner is not involved in any party schisms that threaten success on election day. He will know how to use the executive power to promote the common good. Under Garner all elements of the party should be able to unite. In that case his election would be certain."

Smith and McAdoo and Cox and Davis are on the outside looking in. They are outstanding figures on the big stage. Is there another deadlock coming?

RAILS RECAPTURE CLAUSE.

Representative Sam Rayburn of Texas is chairman of the house interstate commerce commission. Chairman Rayburn let it be known that a bill embodying repeal of the law for recapture of excess profits of railroads and revamping the rate making provisions of the law will be the first of a threefold program to better railroad conditions that will reach the house this session. First, the committee will receive testimony on the Rayburn bill to give the commerce commission supervision of railroad rate holding companies. Purpose of the Rayburn bill is to lift the $261,000,000 burden from the railroads. This amount is involved in a repeal of the transportation law provision authorizing the recapture of excess carrier earnings being produced from the railroads. In addition the interstate commerce commission has $10,600,000 already paid in which will be returned to the roads. It appears that the use, democratic and with a democratic speaker, is going the way to relieve the railroads of their so-called heavy burden.

In a Hawkward Position, to Say the Least!

Daily WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
 N.Y.A. Service Writer

WASHINGTON—Hair cuts, blue laws and religion are mixed up in the struggle to close local barber shops on Sunday, a struggle that continues furiously despite the fact that Congress thus far has been largely engaged on matters of seemingly greater import.

Most Washington barbers do not work on Sunday and most shops here are closed on that day. But such historic issues as religious liberty, the rights of labor, unemployment, laissez faire and public health have been invoked to promote or defeat the Stalker bill which would let barbers have the Sabbath off.

Petitions have poured in from barbers who urge the measure and citizens over the country who oppose Sunday closing laws of all kinds.

Union Backs Measures

THE unionized barbers of the town, who work only six days a week anyway, are the prime pushers of the Stalker bill. Some barber shop proprietors have insisted on staying open Sundays to get the Sunday business and others have had to follow along in order to meet the competition.

Sunday barbering isn't necessary, according to the bill's proponents, one reason being that 98 per cent of men now shave themselves. Barbering is rather a hazardous occupation, many of its practitioners succumbing to lung diseases, and it is essential that every barber have one full day off in seven.

CRACKS IN THE DOME

Hard times or not, the people of Texas paid registration fees on 1,334,797 automobiles and motor-trucks in 1931, or an average of a car for each four and a fraction person . . . averaging slightly above one car per family of five.

The registration showed a decline of only 56,795 below the all-time record of 1,391,570 in 1930. Many counties showed big gains—Bexar, 1795; Dallas, 2988; Harris, 1235; Harrison, 1065; Rusk, 3056; Smith, 2236.

Registrations in some of the counties were:

Anti-trust laws of Texas are attacked in the answer of the Humble Oil & Refining company in Attorney General James V. Alford's counter suit on the nine grounds, and in answer of other companies on two more points.

These other grounds are that the anti-trust statutes violate the 14th amendment to the U. S. constitution, and the due process and equal rights clauses of the state constitution:

1. Contrary to oil proration law.
2. Conflict with the cotton acreage law, now on appeal as invalid.
3. Grounds set up in the Humble answer, largely embracing pleas of the other companies in the counter suit assert the laws are void because they violate the due process and equal rights clauses of the U. S. and Texas constitutions in that:
4. Exemptions make it discriminatory in favor of farmer and livestock producers.
5. Contrary to trade union law.
6. Conflict with co-operative marketing statute.
7. Discrimination in forbidding assignee corporation of one ousted to do business in the state.
8. Punishment of foreign corporations for violations discriminatory.
9. Discrimination in that corporations may escape penalty "at whim of attorney general."
10. Because they attempt to empower attorney general to get perpetual injunction against return of a foreign corporation when ousted.
11. Asserterly deny defendant when a Texas corporation of the right of trial by jury.
12. Denies foreign corporation right of trial by jury.

visitors came up they would tell others what a good time they had and would induce others to come out. He believes that with this method used it would be possible to have 50 to 100 citizens who were not legionnaires attend the meetings in time and would create a closer feeling of fellowship, not only between the legionnaires and non-members, but between all of the citizens.

He had no idea of serving a meal with each meeting of this kind, but thought that it might be well to serve refreshments at some time during the night.

And there is a suggestion that might be well worth while for the Carl Barnes post to try to work out. There is certainly plenty of talent among the members to start the thing off, and later some talent might be included that comes from outside the membership. The Legion is free to use this suggestion if they will pay for having the seat of our trousers mended.

R. H. Snyder just brought us in a Japanese or Chinese newspaper, so that we could get some first-hand information on the war that is not a war, but we can't even tell the nationality of the paper. —BY DAVID WRIGHT—

Special Correspondent. WASHINGTON. — President Hoover's plea against hoarding of money is a commendable step toward releasing vast sums which are being withheld from circulation. Coming in the midst of the senate investigation of foreign loans, which is revealing how American money invested through the international banking crowd in South America has been lost, the plea will undoubtedly have a hard row to hoe in getting a skeptical and panicky public to "loosen up."

The story of how the American investing public has been "played" as the proverbial "goat" makes startling reading. Senator Johnson of California opened the issue when he demanded that the state department furnish the text of communications between President Olaya and the department. Secretary Stimson refused to reveal the contents of the correspondence, holding that the communications were confidential and that the committee could see them only under a pledge of secrecy.

The inside story is this: Two years ago the National City bank of New York floated a $20,000,000 loan in this country to be placed to the credit of the president-elect of Colombia. The South American republic's new administration agreed in return to favor certain legislation which the bankers stipulated, chief of which was approval by the Colombian congress of the Barco concession held by the Mellon Gulf interests.

Last June the National City bank refused to let President Olaya have the last $4,000,000 installment until he had fulfilled part of the bargain. Some of the Colombian legislators, it seems, got wind of what was going on and were mulling up the little deal by refusing to do Olaya's bidding.

And this is where Secretary of State Stimson entered the picture. Olaya sent several telegrams to our state department, saying that he was doing his part to clinch the bargain. No wonder good Secretary Stimson hated to make the information public. It was easier to say that "the communications were of a confidential nature." As Senator Johnson of California, chairman of the senate investigating committee, pointed out, the bankers interested in the deal seem to have had no trouble getting the complete texts from the state department.

What made matters worse was evidence introduced to show that Jefferson Caffrey, American minister to Colombia, took part in the deal as a kind of United States go-between for the National City bank of New York. You don't have to be a believer in table-tipping to understand why everything was being "kept dark" up to the time "H!" Johnson poked his sanctimonious nose into the affair.

Johnson is about as popular with the Hooverites and Mellonites as a man with smallpox. The old hue and cry, that he is carrying on his investigation into South American loans to embarrass the president, was raised, and those who believe implicitly in Mr. Hoover promptly took the cue and began heaving bricks at Hiram.

Ordinarily that would have been sufficient to damage the investigation. But this time all the small city bankers are kicking up a row. And for good reason, which I shall presently tell you. For the moment, let us run down the list of some other huge loans floated in this country for South American republics.

Eight years ago the Equitable Trust company of New York, a Rockefeller bank, floated a $29,000,000 Bolivian bond issue, and soon thereafter the Standard Oil company of New Jersey was given a concession of 2,471,000 acres of Bolivian oil lands. Four years later in 1928, Dillon, Read & Co. unloaded another Bolivian bond issue of $22,000,000 on American investors. Both loans are now in default, but Rockefeller's Standard Oil company has its concession, and the bankers have their commissions.

With both issues now in default, the American investors who are not even getting interest on their money might like to know where part of their money went. Well, a million and a half of the $22,000,000 "loan" was invested in new military roads along the Paraguay border, and Vickers, Ltd., of London, filled orders for more than $5,000,000 worth of ammunition and armaments for the Bolivian government.

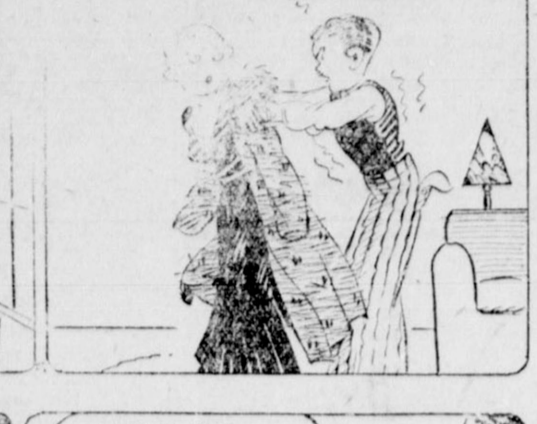

How our diplomats abroad are used as errand boys in furthering the interests of American international bankers is shown by the case of the American & Foreign Power company's negotiation of a power concession in Chile. This company was given a monopoly covering several cities in 1929, and President Hoover cancelled the contract on the ground that it was a swindle on the people of the cities affected by such a scheme.

Then something happened. Julius Lay, counselor of the American embassy at Santiago had a conference with representatives of the National City bank, and he and Ambassador Culbertson then notified the Chilean government that loans would be impossible in future if the contract were cancelled. A short time later Lay was made minister to Honduras.

In 1928 the National City company, a subsidiary of the National City bank of New York, and Seligman & Co., investment bankers, floated an $8,000,000 loan for Peru. It was brought out in testimony before the senate committee that $415,000 of this money was paid as "commissions" to a son of President Leguia. A year earlier these two American companies floated a bond issue of $15,000,000.

In 1929 the Chase National bank of New York floated a Cuban loan of $100,000,000, carrying on the negotiation through President Machado's son-in-law. Whether the son-in-law got a slice of the commissions is not known.

And here's why the small city bankers from one end of the United States are kicking. They are the boys who have been putting up most of this money, and they and their customers have a suspicion that a lot of it went to grease the palms of crooked officials in the South American republics. Those who hold Bolivian bonds, now defaulted in the amount of $61,000,000, feel that they have been played for the proverbial American "sucker." The fellows who floated the loans got their commissions, so they're sitting pretty.

The dime-a-dance girl

By JOHN CLAVICH

BEGIN HERE TODAY Beautiful Ellen Rossiter, salesgirl in Barclay's Department store, works nights as a dance hall hostess at Dreamland. She lives with her extravagant mother, Molly Rossiter, her elder sister, Myra, and her young brother, Mike.

At Dreamland she meets and falls in love with handsome Larry Harrogate, an artist. Later she learns he is engaged to Elizabeth Bowers, a debutante. She is heartbroken but continues to go about with him.

Later Ellen and Barclay go driving and he asks her to marry him. She is delighted and agrees to marry him.

Ellen brushed aside all coquetry and pretense as she told Steven how she had made her. She tried to make him understand how much she liked him, at the same time explaining that she did not love him. She was more successful than she had hoped to be.

She should, of course, have explained that she was already hopelessly in love with Larry Harrogate.

Pride, backed by a desire to hurt him as little as possible, forbade that.

Because she had not told him Steven felt he had yet a chance to win her. He fancied that he had frightened her by being premature, by rushing his suit. Ellen was too blame for that. All unconsciously, she had hardened his determination to make her his wife.

The girl was pleased and grateful that he had made her refusal so easy.

"Will you do me one favor?" he asked. "I'll be so glad to."

"Then call me Steven."

"Steven," she said obediently, flushing. "Steven, Steven—it sounds odd for me to be saying that."

"It sounds rather nice to me," he amended boyishly.

They parted as friends, Ellen would have preferred that they should see each other no more but such a suggestion was impossible to speak to him of the gossip at the store. The inference would be too plain. The one step to protect her from this gossip would be so obvious.

As she said good night Ellen determined that in the morning she would resign her position at the store and seek another. In this manner she would obviate the possibility of encountering him each day. Another job would carry her out of the reach of wagging tongues. Another job was the solution. She must leave Barclay's.

She was not surprised to find Molly up and about. At the sound of the key in the door, Molly appeared, a cold duck sandwich in her hand. She offered half to Ellen, an offer which was refused then perched herself on the arm of a chair to demand an account of the drive.

Ellen flung off her hat. "I'm too tired to talk," she said, moving toward the bedroom. "Nothing happened except that Mr. Barclay asked me to marry him."

"Oh, Ellen! You call that nothing!" "And I refused him," Ellen stated with serene finality.

Molly's face was almost comic in its abrupt transition from delight to complete dismay.

"Ellen, you didn't!" "I did. And furthermore in the morning I'm leaving Barclay's for another job."

In a low, strained voice. "That's what makes me—well, it doesn't make me hate him but it makes me think I should. Oh, why can't men be more fair?"

There was no answer to that question. Both girls knew it. Presently Ellen murmured a good night and slipped off to her own bed. Myra dropped her book to the floor and snapped off the light.

Ellen was awakened by a pounding on the door from the living room. Earlier in the night her sleep had been light and troubled but toward morning she had fallen into heavy slumber. Nevertheless, the terrific noise brought her wide-awake at once. Sure that the building must be on fire, she roused Myra, told her to wake Molly and Mike, grabbed her kimono and ran through the living room to the door. It was barely 6 o'clock.

She jerked open the door and stood in foolish surprise, abruptly conscious of her disheveled attire. Facing her was John Farnum owner of the building.

"What do you mean rousing at at this hour?" she gasped indignantly, trying to hide her bare feet.

"I mean I want my rent and I want it now," he said in a loud voice. "Come in and stop shouting," she answered shortly. "Have the

"I would have been so much easier for all of us," Molly sighed. Ellen began to feel selfish. She could not know, as Molly herself scarcely knew, that her mother was laying a deep and subtle trap. When Ellen went into the bedroom, she was unsure of herself and her wisdom.

Myra was in bed with a book on her knees. She looked up and smiled a welcome but she had determined to let Ellen alone and not ask questions.

Ellen, however, wanted a confidante. She came over to the bed, removed the book from Myra's hands and sat down.

"Steven Barclay asked me to marry him," she said abruptly. "So soon, Ellen?"

"Too soon," Ellen answered darkly. She added, "I shouldn't have said that. I really think he rushed matters because he thought we all desperately needed a lift. Myra, he was wonderful, wonderful. But I don't want to marry him."

"You won't be seeing him any more then?" "Oh, I'll be seeing him."

There was a silence in the dim bedroom where only one light burned. Pale moonlight filtered through an open window, lay in patches on the scarred floor and shone on the big old-fashioned bed with one grave-eyed girl against the pillows and the other at her feet.

"Do you think it would be very wrong to marry a man you liked because you—because you couldn't marry one you thought you loved?" Ellen asked suddenly.

"Oh, I don't know, Ellen." "The funny thing is I don't really know where I am," Ellen went on in a puzzled way. "My feelings whirl around like a shuttlecock. There'd be no problem at all if I didn't like Steven, but I do! I can't decide whether I'm being mercenary and grasping."

"You're not that. You know you're not! Don't even imagine such things!" "But if he didn't have any money—"

"That's extremely foolish of you," Myra interrupted sharply. "I'm not taking sides in this but I won't have you imagining that you're something you're not. You're every bit as good as Steven Barclay. What if he does have money? You're beautiful. You're sweet and good. You're well-born."

"You sound like a novel of the '30's," Ellen broke in with a rueful little laugh. "Just the same, it's true," persisted Myra.

"I don't know. I wasn't sure whether I was going to say 'yes' or 'no' until I did," Ellen said, staring out at the blinking electric sign across the street.

"You'd know what you were going to say, wouldn't you, if it had been Larry Harrogate?" Ellen's face turned scarlet.

"He hasn't asked me," she answered, her cheeks continuing to flame. "I haven't a reason in the world to imagine he will when he's engaged to another girl."

"Has he—ever said anything that might suggest he meant to tell you about that?" "No, he hasn't," Ellen admitted.

Late Publisher Was Lover of Trees

By United Press. LAMESA, Tex.—Charles Hurst, late West Texas publisher of Abernathy and Hale Center, would rather that a tree mark his grave than cold stone or glistening marble.

During his lifetime, which was ended when he succumbed recently to injuries suffered in an automobile accident, Hurst spent much time among trees and growing things.

Twenty years ago as a young man, he tramped over England planting acorns as he went and gathering data and photographs of trees that have figured in England's history.

"It's just Mr. Farnum suddenly troubled at 6 in the morning about his rent. We'll have to pay him immediately."

"He'll wait," declared Molly relieved and promptly sleepy again. "I talked to him day before yesterday—on Saturday. I explained how hard-up we are. Let me see him. Where's that kidnap?"

"I'm afraid it will be useless to see him now," Ellen stopped her. "He's heard about our party last night. I've no doubt he knows every item on the menu."

"That's the trouble with living in a place like this," Myra observed fretfully, pounding her pillow into plumpness. "Everybody talks so."

"We won't be living here long if we can't get the rent together. Mr. Farnum looks in a mood to carry our furniture down to the street personally. Just how much money have we any way?"

"I borrow $200 on the insurance. There should be lots left. My pocketbook's on the bureau."

Molly went to sleep again. When the pocketbook was opened it appeared that she had been unduly optimistic. She had managed the day before to do away with over $160. Ellen could not hide her consternation. How were she and Myra to bring the vitally necessary insurance to date again?

By emptying her pocketbook and Myra's they succeeded in piecing together the $60. It left them exactly $12 for the week's food and carfare.

Ellen saw that it was out of the question for her to resign her position. It would take at least a week to find another. Even the possible $25 from Dreamland Saturday would not be sufficient to tide them over.
