Hemisphere Defense Becomes A Reality With Move Into Iceland

Press dispatches describe these moves without actually being in it. Landing of U. S. naval forces in Iceland on Monday as "far-reaching."

Indeed it is far-reaching, and the implications of it should be enough to jar all citizens from their "business as usual" lethargy into the realization that we are just about as close to being at war as possible seat of this hemisphere or only partly in it.

And yet this argument is an arbitrary one. What difference does it make whether Iceland is in the eastern or western hemisphere? This hemisphere idea is the product of efforts to fix boundaries for defense of our nation and its co-democracies of the new world.

The president stated this clearly in his long-awaited talk on foreign policy weeks ago when he spoke of dangers inherent in any east control of Dakar on the west coast of Africa, the Cape Verde and Azores Islands, etc. It would appear in light of the current development that this was as much of a promise as a statement.

Landing of troops in Iceland is a manifestation of the doctrine of scotch for hemisphere defense in the outposts instead of simply bulwarking at home.

More than that, it demonstrates beyond a doubt that the United States is deadly serious about its aid to England, and that it is willing to take whatever steps are necessary to see that England gets that aid.

We have been saying this in strong words for many months, saying it with language that was intentionally blunt and understandable by totalitarian nations. But only with the moving of troops into Iceland has the United States gone out of its front yard in the fulfillment of a pledge to set up for defense when and where we decided. It is startling to the extent that action speaks louder than words.

THE SACRED DAGGER

By Rita Mohr Nelson

Chapter 35
The Flame Burns

Diana's lip tightened and then she spoke. "It's my opinion that Dr. and Mrs. Willard are to blame for everything. Had they let well enough alone, we—"

"Diana!" cried Beth.

Anna rose and left the table. She joined Pete and the lama sitting in front of her tent and staring off gloomily in the direction of the Eskkan Hills peaks. Later Larry and Beth came one and tried to cheer them up.

It was Daddap with his keen desert eyes who first saw the returning plane. Everyone except Oliver was on the field when it landed. Anne had let Beth hold her in the crowd.

"He may have news of your parents."

Sherwood remained in the plane several moments sending off a final radio message to Shani Lun and looked as if forbidding when he did scramble out that everyone hesitated to question him. Anne was the first to venture.

"Did you find out anything about father and mother?" He turned and gazed at her.

"Not a thing, Anne, I'm sorry. The whole trip was useless. He began shrugging off the parachute harness, talking to each a location about the ship with Mackey as he did so. Then he spoke to the group. "Come to my tent after I've had a shower and I'll tell you what happened."

Anne did not go but she learned afterwards that Philip was present and showed friendliness to Sherwood by asking him and Mackey to join the camp mess with the sensible statement that white man isolated in a spot like this could not afford to quarrel.

"He probably felt that having gained the enmity of the Nagaras, Blase has become less of a menace to the expedition," Anne suggested.

"Blase accepted," Beth went on, "and in adding his supplies and cook to ours. You should have heard his story. He found the Nagara village to which the Russians had penetrated. There had been fighting and a massacre but no sign of the white men. The natives shot at Blase. He got away though there are several bullet holes in his wings."

"Ezavens!" gasped Anne.

"But he swears the Nagaras are not as vindictive as people think. The Russians were not archaeologists—merely a crew of adventurers the Emir's agents had picked out and interested in the proposition. Their government repudiates them, though Blase would have liked to turn them back and save their lives. He thinks they have no chance either to get out alive or to find the treasure city."

"Did he get a view of Shya-Nago?"

"I guess so. He doesn't seem to want to talk about it. Pete predicted he'd die for that and Blase answered if he did it was worth it. He wouldn't see any more, but you should have seen his eyes as he remembered. Then he began joking about something else."

"Does he really believe the Nagaras will try to — to kill him?"

"We couldn't get him to say. He'd only joke about it. But what do you care?" Beth chuckled mischievously. "He's not your husband, you're only married to him, if you know what I mean."

Anne colored in spite of herself. Beth saw it and giggled again.

Dinner that night was a rather hilarious affair. Blase having contributed sharks' fins, mushrooms, fruit and Turkistan wine from the supplies the governor had heaped upon him.

Even Anne's frown melted a trifle. Blase was playing a bold game. Perhaps she could match him at it. At least she and her parents were still in good standing with the Nagaras from what the priest had said the other night. Later she stood at his side while they all sipped a little close harmony over Mackey's mouth organ. He managed to get in a personal question under cover of the general noise.

"Which is your tent?"

She turned away, hardly able to believe her ears at first or surprise the rage that welled up in her.

Later, having a chance to be near her as she changed a phonograph needle he tried again. "If you'd like to have a talk, Anne—"

"There have already been too many words," she answered, quoting from his letter, and let her

Man About Manhattan—Welles Seems To Have Monopoly In New York

By GEORGE TUCKER

NEW YORK—To a visiting fireman walking up 44th street on to Broadway, it must seem as though Orson Welles is all over the place.

Passing St. James theatre he is regaled with signs and banners proclaiming the four-star virtues of "Native Son." Further up the same block the 44th street theatre, operated by the everlastingly virtuous "Native Son" and then on Broadway, in front of the Palace RKO theatre, there is rigged up a really imposing display for "Citizen Kane." Orson's movie, with a mammoth replica of the young actor-director, and with smoke pouring from the top of the marquee. On wise-acre wanted to know if the smoke was piped in from an adjacent coffee animated sign that shows "steam" issuing forth in plummy gusts from the spout of a two-story coffee pot.

I was talking with Sammy Kaye and his manager, Jimmy Peppi, at the Essex House before Sammy left town on another of his interminable tours, and he spoke with satisfaction of a contract he signed recently with Frank Daley at the Meadowbrook. This is an unusual contract, for it covers a ten-year period. He is, to play eight weeks a year for the next ten years at the Meadowbrook, which is flattering assurance as to the future. Many bands cannot see that far ahead.

Peppi said Daley remarked to him that the Kaye organization would still be going strong 20 years from now. At twenty years, Jim, he said, "I'd hate to think it." Sammy hopes by then that he'll be comfortably retired, taking his ease where he sees fit, instead of junketing about the country.

There is now an ironic touch to Joe Moss' reputation as one of Broadway's nattiest dressers. Joe is a night club man and a well-known Broadway figure. He invented the minimum charge in Broadway night clubs, and for years he was manager of the Hollywood and the International Casino.

Both are closed now, but Joe's creases are still sharp as ever, and he still gives the appearance of having just stepped out of a band box. The point is this. Those night club Joe used to manage now are men's clothing stores. The Hollywood is owned by Crawford's, the International Casino by Bond's.

Producers, no less than actors, rely on tailors and on superstition. Herman Shumlin, for instance, has named his yacht "The Watch." Reason: One of his two hit plays this year was "Watch On The Rhine."

The five "miners" in "The Corn Is Green" hurried down to Wilkes-Barre, Pa., over the weekend to have a look at a real mine. After crawling through shafts for several hours they agreed bodily that actors' paint was a much nicer proposition than the grit in those Pennsylvania pits.

Hollywood Sights and Sounds—There Are Even Hollywood People Who Deliberately Skip Big Money

By ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD—Hollywood lives under the dollar sign, and most of the hands in town are stretching up to grab hold.

"Get my salary up," is the actor's plea to his agent.

"More dough," cries the sudden popular comic.

"Oh, money, money!" is a mammoth community theme song.

And yet you'd be surprised, this being so—as it is everywhere else on earth—that there are actually people in Hollywood who deliberately skip the big money. For a purpose.

There's a girl here now (I can't give her name because it would spoil her plan) who is working for $18 a week as a secretary in one of the small studios. Until recently she was an assistant director on movies and air shows, drawing a handsome stipend and worth it. Her shows closed. She had an offer—connected with movies but not on the inside—of a $100-a-week job. She turned it down for the $18. Inside, she figures, she can work back to her old spot, and even beyond. Her small job is a long-term investment. She's doing now what she used to do five years ago at another studio. Getting the job wasn't through pull, either. She had to have a reference for her secretarial prowess. She got one from the girl who had been her own secretary when she was in the money!

Dorothy Thompson Says—Regardless Of Ideologies There's A Clear-Cut Issue To This War

"I would rather," said the infectable Mr. Lindbergh, "see my country ally herself with England, or even with Germany with all her faults, than with the cruelty, the Godlessness, and the barbarism that exist in Soviet Russia."

I have seldom read more insistent words. What Mr. Lindbergh would "rather" see us make very clear way back last summer. He would "rather" see us make a non-aggression pact with a victorious Germany. What he advocated in Chicago last summer was that we recognize the fact that Germany was going to win the war, and then make a treaty with the Nazis. He said that without such a treaty "with the dominant power of Europe," there would be no possibility of peace.

Now, what it would be interesting to hear from Mr. Lindbergh is whether, after the attack on Russia, he still thinks that a treaty with Hitler is a treaty.

It is very curious that no word of condemnation of Russia passed Mr. Lindbergh's lips as long as Russia was, in effect, an ally of Germany. On the contrary, Mrs. Lindbergh assured us that both Communism and Nazism were "waves of the future."

Wholeheartedly and wholeheartedly, both Lindberghs swallowed the then official Nazi version that this war was against British Imperialism, and that the future lay with the "socialist" states. Nor did Godlessness bother either of them.

Mrs. Lindbergh, in her book, put Christianity and capitalism in the same paragraph as two things she was no longer quite sure about.

"The longer this war in Europe continues, the more confused the issues become," said Mr. Lindbergh.

The issues are confusing to Mr. Lindbergh because he has been following the Nazi party line in interpreting the war. That certainly makes things confusing. Because Hitler's war was first to free and unite Germans, then against bolshevism, then against plutocracy, then against the British conception of the gentleman, then against the division of Europe and the destruction of its unity, then for "freezing" such little states as Slovakia and Croatia, and now against everything. Hitler has fought for nationalism and against nationalism, for socialism and against socialism, for Europe and against Europe.

But the British viewpoint has not been in the least confusing. Neville Chamberlain stated it at the outbreak of the war. "If I should think that one man wished to dominate the world, I should think he would have to be stopped."

Nobody is fighting Nazism, as a philosophy of life for Germans. If the Germans like it, why let's okay with the rest of us. What the world has been fighting has been Nazism's aggressions against the world. The world did not go to war against communism because Stalin kept his armies at home. He kept them home, that is to say, until Hitler began moving his.

This is a war for democracy only insofar as democracy recognizes the rights of peoples to freedom and independence, and to use their labor and the soil on which they live for building up their own lives. Were the Russian government three times as bad as it is, Hitler would not be justified in conquering Russia. Were the German government even worse than it is, nobody would be justified in attacking Germany and trying to enslave her people. Nobody did attack Germany. Germany attacked others. This war is to stop her from doing so.

That's the issue. And there is nothing confusing about it. It is not confusing that Hitler should attack rich, middle-class democracies like Holland, or poor authoritarian states like Greece, or weak constitutional monarchies like Yugoslavia, or powerful empires like France and Britain, or the Soviet Union.

Hitler is not waging a war for an ideology. He is waging an ideology for a war. He does not let his ideology determine his policy. His policy determines his ideology. He is neither crusading against money nor against bolshevism. He is crusading for money, resources and power, and against everybody. He doesn't pick his victims because of their ideas, but because of their strategic positions and their resources.

The world, as Mr. Lindbergh ought to know, is round. If Hitler moves far enough east he ends up on the frontier of Alaska where Russia now is, and if he moves far enough west, he ends up in the Portuguese islands, which are the nearest points in the Atlantic to South America.

Since Russia stands in the way of one course, and Britain in the way of the other, we are pro-Russian and pro-British in this struggle. Because we simply do not wish to see Nazi Germany dominate the world. Also, we would not like to see Britain or Russia dominate the world. Mr. Lindbergh, but we do not happen to think that either eventually is likely.

As for ideology of communism that you so suddenly detest, it is a German invention, Mr. Lindbergh. Both of these totalitarian conceptions originated in German philosophy, and they are much more alike than they are different. Also, the bolshevik revolution in Russia was aided and abetted by the German general staff, for the same reason that Hitler has aided and abetted revolutions in the democracies: namely, to weaken the victim. Lenin and twenty-three bolsheviks were sent in a sealed car through Germany to Russia for the purpose of getting Russia

Life's Darkest Moment

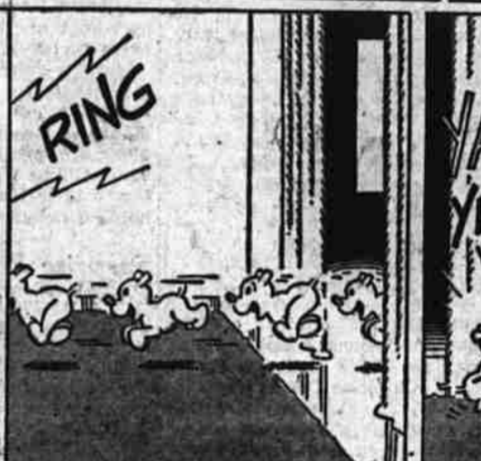

Irving Reis is a director today. That is as he wants it. He used to be a writer, with a contract that was paying $750 a week with a boost to $1,000 on tap. He wanted a change; writing was nice, but not enough. He won his release, and a directing job at another studio—starting at $200. He has made "little" pictures, and they've led him up into the department of bigger things. His next movie will be definitely A.

Young David Hempstead is a producer today. Made "Kitty Foyle" among other movies. A few years ago Hempstead had a comfortable berth at a good stuary, but he felt he needed more experience. He chucked his job, and worked around in various studio departments for while or nothing. He got what he wanted. It isn't alfalfa any more.

A decade ago a young actor who had been a popular star decided he wanted to stay in pictures longer than acting would let him. He was making $2,500 a week at the time. He kissed it goodbye, and started in as a writer at $125 a week. Today Glenn Tryon, who

Helping Hand One reason you see so much advertising is this: It helps people with something to sell to find customers. It helps those folks called 'consumers' to find out about things they want to buy. All of which is another way of saying, advertising saves a lot of time for everyone. That's why advertising pays—on both sides of the counter. Big Spring Daily Herald
