OIL SHUTDOWN PLAN REVOKED ON SATURDAY

HOUSTON, March 25.—Chairman Lon A. Smith of the Texas Railroad commission said today that the "free flow-shutdown" order for the East Texas oil field would not go into effect Monday as planned.

Smith immediately began a communication to R. D. Parker, chief of the oil and gas division at Austin, giving instructions for rescinding the latest plan to solve Texas oil problems.

Under the original plan the field of 10,000 wells would have been open Monday to flow freely for two hours to test the field's potential, then be placed under a complete shutdown until further notice.

Smith acted after returning here from the Conroe oil field and learning of the plan described by Attorney General James V. Allred as "probably not workable."

Dozens of East Texas operators had protested against the plan. Several oil companies had planned court action against the commission if the order had been carried out.

Smith said he had no plans for a substitute oil order.

It was learned that federal Judge Randolph Bryant would come here from Beaumont to discuss the Texas oil situation with Allred.

Eastland Revival Continues to Draw Large Attendance

The Eastland Baptist revival in full swing at the Baptist church of Eastland, opened the night services with congregational singing and prayers by pastor Rev. William H. Joyner. Singers, Frank Y. Williams, W. D. Owens, and others.

At 7:30, "A Wayfaring Pilgrim" by Mrs. O. B. Darby, gave keynote to the sermon, "Side Doors to Heaven," or "here more than one way to God."

At John 9-10, "I am the light of the world, if any man enter in by me, he shall not be saved." Moody cried, "satisfied there are thousands of people who would enter God's door, if they could use a side door."

The sermon conveyed the message of the seven side doors which the people attempt to reach. Ancestry; depending on a time of godly forbearance and a christian mother. The speaker declared there is no proxy savior, one must personally enter God's door. Just as good isn't all that is necessary for charity. Commendation but not substitute for belief.

Internalism: Orders are good, the speaker, but membership cannot insure eternal life. Memorialism; all right in its heart felt religion is Christ hearted. He said, "Give me heart."

Optimism: Christ himself was used, but he did not command the price of salvation. Education: The evangelist declared the child cannot be trained without instruction.

Side doors exist only in the mind of man. In reality, there are side doors, and never will Christ said of himself, "I am a door." The speaker concluded, "That door is flung for the whole wide world to enter."

There is but one name given to heaven and earth, whereby men may be saved. Those who were received into the church by baptism, Othello Bishop, Billie Gage and two by let-Mrs. L. G. Rogers, Quannah, Hannah Lindsey.

The subject of sermon for tomorrow is "Holding the Devil's Tongue." The public is cordially invited.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK

By EDSON R. WAITE, Shawnee, Oklahoma

PAUL R. KELTY, editor of the Portland Oregonian, says: "Newspaper Advertising is the one dependable medium day in and day out that sells and keeps 'sold' old customers and molds buying habits of the new!"

"A thinking season precedes a buying season and the consistent newspaper advertisers pre-sells his customers long before they visit his store.

"Any good merchant will agree that he must be consistent in all his policies. He would discharge in a minute any salesman who would put forth his best selling efforts one week and who on the following week would treat his customers indifferently.

"In the United States each year 2,200,000 young people become of age and their buying habits change. Another 1,100,000 marriages are performed—and that same number of brides take up new interests in life and thoughts of dantsants and dates are abandoned for that all-absorbing venture of making a home.

"Markets are growing—growing, growing—at every turn, irrespective of business conditions. Over two million homes are blessed every year with 'little visitors'—and they demand service, plenty of it—and present a lucrative market of their own.

"A good advertiser need not necessarily be a large one—but he must be consistent!"

Next day at the Acme Manufacturing Company.

This story is based on an actual incident. A half-day's pay on the job Jim Carson almost got would have paid for a telephone for a month. Having a telephone is of course no guarantee that you'll find work. But your chances of getting a job are certainly better if you can be reached promptly when a job is open.

Oklahoma City Make Debut Texas League

GEORGE B. ROSCOE, Press Staff Correspondent OKLAHOMA CITY.—A group of youngsters who made account of themselves last in the Western league will debut in the Oklahoma City in their debut in the Texas league.

At this early stage, Manager Luderus could almost line up for the opening of the pennant race here. His team battled its way to the top in last summer's league race.

Important additions have been made to offset Schalk's absence. Second baseman Tom Holroyd, brought from Beaumont to the New York Yankees, is an important addition. He is expected to be a natural and both Owner Jack and Luderus think he is a natural.

He has a natural swing, and is a good fielder and has a good arm. He is expected to be a natural and both Owner Jack and Luderus think he is a natural.

PECK'S PROBLEMS . . . By Laufer

With his greatest problem solved—the signing of Pitcher Wesley Ferrell—Roger Peckinpaugh, manager of the Cleveland Indians, can settle down to finding a good utility outfielder and a good left-handed hurler.

Peck's outfield of Vosmik, Averill and Porter is one of the best in the American league, but he is without a capable substitute.

HERE--- AND THERE

By ELVIE R. JACKSON

Beauty unadorned is adored the most, says the poet, but his trite saying has never been echoed in the heart of woman.

From the earliest time and dawn of history we find evidences of the desire and habit of women as well as men to adorn themselves. In the treasures found by the famous Schliemann in the excavations in searching for the site of Troy, and in his discoveries in 1872 of the bits of jewelry, in earrings of silver, in bracelets, and in later excavations, among the idols, household vessels and carvings, very unusual to us, silverware ornaments and gold earrings, and flat gold plates evidently used as breast cups for women, we see this desire.

Not so many years ago, in the excavations which discovered the King Tut tomb the vast wealth of gold and silver ornaments, jewels, girdles, chains and rings worn by women, thousands of years before Christ, startled even the scientists in their wealth of suggestions, of the luxury loving habits of the people of that time and the efforts for self-beautification of the women in their variety of jewels and personal adornments.

Thomas Carlyle in his Sartor Resartus tells us of Teufelsdröckh of Weissnietwo and his treatise on clothes, their origin and influence, who wrote that the first purpose of clothes he imagined was not for warmth or decency, but for ornament; that clothes gave individuality and distinction, that clothes had made men of us, and they are threatening to make make clothes screens of us. His theory is, a man is a soul, a spirit, a divine apparition, whose flesh and senses are but a garment. Perhaps he may be right, but he is certainly not wrong when he thinks that clothes and adornment form a most effectual screen for the human being.

It is as natural for women to wish to make themselves as pleasing as possible to the eye, as it is to the bird to preen his feathers, to the hen to settle her torgery with a wise eye cocked toward her male companion.

History gives us marvelous descriptions of gorgeous raiment, jewels, ruffs and head dresses of the women of the court from Christ's time to the present day.

In fact before the dawn of the new world, when Cleopatra, the divine siren of Egypt, clad in her gossamer draperies, swung about her hips the glittering jeweled sash, with its pendant pearl in front, that served more to suggest than conceal the rounding curves beneath; and her feet, tended by her slave girls, and thrust into jewel encrusted sandals that wore a flat flashing jewel over each toenail.

It was left to the era of the Puritan and the Quaker when they forsook the foreign gilded courts to start the fashion of the sober garb, but yet, the coquettish bond only revealed and added to the purity and winsomeness of a face beneath.

Who hasn't seen the little girl playing "Lady Come, Go to See," who wears her mother's dress trailing on the floor, as she makes her make-believe visit to the "lady," who hasn't found a crimson rose petal with which to rouge her childish cheek, and a burnt match with which to accentuate her eyebrows.

Yes, we love adornment, and if we didn't where would the manufacturers be? Where would the great class of artisans in metals who give their time and talent to the making of jewels and ornaments, be? What would become of the great modistes of the world, who employ enormous sales forces in order to evolve their costumes, or madame and hold their spring and fall style shows, with their mannequins, engaged all over the different world centers, and who parade in displaying the varying styles, costumes, and materials?

Stations Sell Gas Made By Nature

By United Press
 LIVINGSTON, Tex. — Despite the fact there are no oil refineries in this section of the state, gasoline produced in Polk county is for sale at many filling stations here.

A heavy flow of gas was struck in this well several months ago. Tremendous pressure liquefies a certain amount of the gas, creating gasoline, which is piped into tank trucks and hauled away for sale.

PARIS STYLES

By MARY KNIGHT
United Press Staff Correspondent
PARIS.—When Mile, de Graiffier d'Hestroy, daughter of the Ambassador to France, became the bride of the Comte de Mortemar, she wore a Worth costume in a bright red soft smooth-skirted faced with a plain skirt and a jacket with wide bell-shaped sleeves above a long, tight-fitting cuff. A scarf collar was attached by gold buckles to the neck, and a peplum. The blouse was in soft white chiffon and small red hat completed the outfit. This was her civil service costume.

For the religious ceremony the bride wore a white satin wedding gown from the same house, draped in the front of the bodice with long tight sleeves and the train cut in one piece with the skirt.

Danseau Advocates Living Near Soil

By United Press
NORTHAMPTON, Mass. — To appreciate life one must live near the soil, Mary Wigman, famed German danseuse, said while here for an appearance at Smith College.

"Why do men live in cities, where they cannot touch soil with their feet?" she asked. "Why do they insist on living where they cannot see, smell or feel earth, flowers, trees? I don't believe you can know anything about the earth unless you really walk upon it."

Miss Wigman described the modern man as "like the giant Atlas, locked in steel towers and stone prisons, high above his Mother Earth, and so in danger of perishing."

Unwanted Crop Led to a Profit

LINDSAY, Cal.—A seed house sent William Wilson, local orange grower, the wrong kind of seed, but he grew a profitable crop anyway.

Wilson ordered mustard seed. When the seed arrived, he planted it. When the plants came through the ground, they proved to be broccoli. Wilson knew nothing about broccoli, but he let the crop reach maturity and then discovered that an Italian vegetable firm was willing to pay a good price for his crop. In fact, he has profited more from the seed than he did from his orange crop.

ONE I LOVE

by LAURA LOU BROOKMAN

NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

WHEN JANET HILL learns a ROLF CARLYLE has been breaking engagements with her to meet BETTY KENDALL, a society girl, she tells him their marriage is off. Janet is 22, pretty and successful. BETTY KENDALL is 20, advertising manager of Every Home Magazine.

She still loves ROLF and cannot forget him. JEFFREY GRANT, young engineer who once loved Janet, appears one night just in time to save her purse from a holdup man. Janet becomes interested in the SILVANI family, almost destitute. JEFFREY GRANT, who once loved Janet, appears one night just in time to save her purse from a holdup man. Janet becomes interested in the SILVANI family, almost destitute.

NEA GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVII

JANET stared at the photograph. She did not hear what Mrs. Curtis was saying. She looked down at the smiling eyes, the pretty, slightly pouting lips of the girl girl. "You're married? But how could it be? How could it possibly be?"

Then she found words. "Your daughter?" Janet said slowly. "Is this your daughter?"

Mrs. Curtis took the photograph from her and held it out admiringly. "You'd never guess it, would you?" she asked. "Doesn't look like me in the least. No, Betty takes after her father's family. My first husband, you know. We lost him when Betty was five years old."

Janet said, "Oh! and then, because something more seemed expected, she added, "She's very pretty!"

The mother smiled. "Well, of course I think she is! This picture isn't her newest but it's the one I like best. They've used it in the newspapers several times. Betty's always been so popular!"

There was a pause and then Mrs. Curtis went on. "She seems such a child to me yet. I can't realize my little girl is married!"

Janet mastered an impulse to flee from the room. It was obvious that Mrs. Curtis wanted to talk about her daughter and she must listen. "How old is she?" she asked politely.

"Only 19. I wish she had waited a year or two. I mean before marrying. I try to tell myself it's all for the best. Young people do things differently nowadays than when I was a girl. They want to go their own way. I'm sorry Betty didn't take me into her confidence about the wedding — it was an elopement, you know. But then she's happy and that's all that matters! Oh, yes, I'm sure everything is for the best!"

It was just then that Mrs. Curtis' eye lighted on the clock across the room. "Almost 11!" she exclaimed. "Why, I had no idea it was so late! Miss Hill, will you call Frederick and tell him to bring the car around at once? I promised to meet Rachel Thornton and I'll never make it!"

She was gone in a flutter of agitation. Janet took up the house telephone and spoke to the chauffeur. Then she sat down at her desk. Mrs. Curtis had dropped the photograph and it lay there, beside the silver frame. The dark eyes seemed to smile mockingly and the bowed lips were scornful.

Impatiently Janet turned the picture face down. She put both elbows on the desk and covered her eyes with her hands to stop the mad whirligig that was going on around her.

"I've got to think," she told herself. And then, "I've got to get away from here—now."

THAT was it, of course. She'd have to get away. But where? When could she go? What would she tell Mrs. Curtis? A dozen questions drummed at her ears at once. She didn't know the answers to any of them. Only that she must leave. Get away!

She heard footsteps and knew Mrs. Curtis was coming back. Janet looked up.

The woman stood in the doorway. "I'm leaving, Miss Hill," she said. "I'll tell Frederick to call for me at four. You won't forget about sending the check to the Welfare Committee?"

"No, Mrs. Curtis. I won't forget." She was alone then. Mechanical Janet turned the photograph face up, unfastened the clasp at the back of the silver frame and slipped the picture into place. She laid it on a table across the room. Mrs. Curtis could decide later where she wanted it.

The check for the Welfare Committee was in the top drawer of her desk. Janet took it out, addressed an envelope and inserted the check. She tried to go on with her work but could not. She kept thinking that Betty Kendall had been here in this room. Sitting at this very desk perhaps. The eyes in the photograph were still laughing at her.

"So you thought you'd get away?" Janet jeered at herself. "You thought you'd forget!"

She rose then and went to her own room. With the door closed behind her, sitting on the bed, her hands pressed together, Janet fought it out.

She must go away, of course. But not just yet. That would be foolish. To go away now might hurt her in finding another position. There was no reason why she should leave so long as ROLF and his wife were not here. When she knew they were coming she would find an excuse and depart. She could be looking for another job in the meantime. Saving money, too. She would need the money because jobs were so uncertain now.

It was the next morning that Janet said casually to Mrs. Curtis, "When do you expect your daughter to return to Lancaster?"

The woman smiled. "I haven't the slightest idea," she said. "But not for a month—at least. She's having such a wonderful time and—well, honeymoons only come once."

Inasmuch as Mrs. Curtis had married twice, and, presumably, had two honeymoons, it was a surprising remark. Janet made no comment, however. She felt reassured. There was a month, perhaps more, in which to make her plans.

JEFF GRANT looked up from the letter over which he was frowning and met a pair of very dark brown eyes. The eyes were smiling. They were set in a small oval face, framed in a slightly untidy mass of curls. A soft voice said, "Mr. Grant, could I bother you just a moment?"

Jeff's grin was good-natured. "Go ahead," he said. "What can I do for you?"

Dolores Calahan glanced quickly over her shoulder. The other desk in the office was unoccupied and there was no one within hearing distance. She smiled then, a provocative smile that bowed her brightly painted lips and showed a flash of very white teeth.

"I was wondering if you'd do something for me," she said. "Something I sort of hate to ask."

She was a little thing and she had a childish, almost timid voice. Jeff said, encouragingly, "Well, let's hear what it is. I can't say yes until I know, you know."

Dolores looked over her shoulder again. "It's like this," she said. "I heard you talking to Mr. Bristow the other day about cameras and the pictures you're taken. And you seemed to know so much about them—well, I was wondering if you'd do this for me. My brother's birthday comes next week and I want to buy him a camera. I was wondering if you'd be willing to help me pick it out so that I'd be sure to get a good one."

It seemed a simple enough request. Jeff said, "Why, sure — I guess so."

Dolores brightened. "Gee, that's swell of you! You see I can't afford to pay very much but I want to get the best one I can for the price. There's a store up in the next block where they sell them. Really won't take very long."

"When do you want to make this purchase?" the young man asked.

"Would today be all right? I have my lunch hour at the same time you have yours this week. I could meet you in the lobby down stairs—"

JEFF nodded. "All right," he agreed. There was someone coming and Dolores hurried away. Just before she reached the door she turned and gave him a quick smile.

It was slightly out of the ordinary, Jeff realized, arranging such a meeting. And yet they couldn't just walk out of the office together either. It was a simple enough favor the girl had asked. Miss Calahan was a first rate stenographer and always did his letters quickly. He couldn't have refused without seeming rude.

When he saw her waiting near the big entrance Jeff smiled. Dolores was wearing a new spring suit with a gay plaid scarf tied beneath her chin. The big bow made her seem more childish than ever. She wore a tiny black hat with a bright red feather at a jaunty angle. A cute little figure. He hadn't realized she was so attractive.

Dolores saw him and came forward, beaming. "Gee," she said, "I was beginning to think maybe you had to stop for something."

They went out to the street. "It's down this way," Dolores said. "Right in the next block. Gee, I think it's nice of you to do this for me. Grant—"

She chattered on as they crossed the street. A large limousine had drawn to the curb ahead and a girl stepped out. She turned and just then Jeff Grant called out, "Hello, Janet!"

He and Dolores were abreast of her. "This is Miss Calahan," Jeff said, eagerly. "Miss Calahan, Miss Hill—"

Janet said, "Hello, Jeff" and "How do you do." She smiled but there was no warmth in that smile. Janet had caught sight of the purse Dolores Calahan was carrying.

McEun and Moore On Ranger Elks Program Monday

"Tiger Billy" McEun, favorite of many local wrestling fans will appear in the Ranger Elks club arena Monday night with "Wild Bill" Carter of Waxahachie, Tex.

The Tiger is well known over the state as he is a very capable grappler and rough with it. Wild Bill Carter has had many matches in Fort Worth and Dallas the past three months and the matches that he has lost were usually the result of arguments with the audience and the referee. Carter cancelled two other matches in the south part of the state to get a chance to meet McEun Monday. Matchmaker Wilson will have worries on his mind Monday when these two roughers meet as the best man may leave the ring in a very battered condition. The club has arranged to have police at the ring-side to assure the crowd that they will not be injured in any way, while these two grapplers are mingling each other.

In the other main event "Ug" Moore, the very popular Denton College football tackle, who has displayed exceptionally his science and skill as a grappler here the past two weeks in matches here is due for a beating at the hands of "Chick" Evans. Evans was the youngest pilot in the Royal Flying Corps of Canada during the World War. After the war "Chick" decided that life was becoming very dull and was appointed to a position with the Canadian Northwest Mounted police. After entering the police service Evans started wrestling on the side and developed into the leading contender of the light-heavyweight championship of Canada. The champion refused to meet him and "Chick" migrated south to the United States and has wrestled in Fort Worth many times losing only one bout.

In the special event Johnny McCain of Tulsa, Okla., enters the ring with "Bert" Edwards of Kansas City, one of the rough and tough Edwards clan.

A unique adventure in entertainment is offered to this community with the coming of the Monroe Hollywood Marionettes on April 4, under the auspices of the high school seniors at the auditorium of the high school.

A Marionette show offers possibilities of amusement undreamed of by those not familiar with this type of entertainment. The mechanical and technical skill involved in the productions, and the illusions of life that these little figures are able to give when handled by expert puppeteers is most intriguing. To many, this type of show is thought of as being for children only, but those adults who have been venturesome enough to experiment with this form of being entertained are even more enthusiastic about it than the children.

Two performances are to be given. The always popular fairy story of Cinderella will be presented for the children at the matinee, which is scheduled for 2:30 o'clock and the evening show presents a forty-niner period story, "The Lost Adams' Diggins," a romance of a gold mine. Specialty acts, featuring movie stars in miniature, will be added to each performance.
